Rapid Sheep Shearing.

CLIPPED OF THEIR WOOL BY ELECTRIC KNIVES.

Great Falls, Montana, has for some time been credited with being in advance of other places in the numerous uses to which electricity is applied, and now it again comes to the front with a claim that it is the only place on earth where sheep shearing is done with the aid of electricity, says a writer in the Electrical World. Many attempts have been made to construct a sheep-shearing machine for use here which would do the work formerly done by hand, but none proved successful until the Woolsey shearing machines, brought from Bir-Falls, Montana, which has become by far the largest woolshipping point of the Northwhere the machines are worked

Shearing sheds were erected this company furnishes the power to drive the shearing machines. The amount required was only six horse-power, and a power, and a motor was taken from one of the cars, the armature pinion being replaced by a

After the machines were perienced in keeping the speed uniform, as there were twenty of them constantly at work. The foreman of the shearers, after five minutes' instruction, took full charge of the motor, sary, in oiling, starting and stopping. The machines were operated for nearly three weeks by this motor, and in that time sheared 16,184 sheep, averaging nearly 100 sheep per day per machine.

The shearing proved quite an attraction, the street railway company carrying a large number of passengers to witness the novel sight. The shears resemble horse clippers in their operation, the power being transmitted to the same through universal joints.

"Home Sweet Home"

We have seen in several papers the following interesting account of where "Home, Sweet Home' was sung:

The first time that the tender was sung in public was when an Indian, brooding over the death of his beloved squaw and pays all expenses for five papoose, committed suicide on the spot where they were buried.

It was a time when the boundary lines between Georgia and Tennessee were in dispute and the half-breeds were constantly making trouble. In order to
