The disfranchisement of the larger half of the population in South Carolina has been severely criticized in many Northern Journals which at the same time insist upon making quite as harsh and stringent regutations with respect to naturalized citizens and aliens applying for naturalization. In this they are inconsistent. The experiment made during the period of reconstruction in South Carolina, when the negroes by their dominance at the polls were masters of the situation and gave signal proof of their inability for self-government goes far to justify whatever self-protecting measures have since been taken to confirm white supremacy. Until the negro shall have grown up to the necessary measure of citizenship he should not be trusted with unrestricted access to the ballotbox.—Philadelphia Record.
