Less Excuse for Lynching.
It is a hopeful sign that the courts are inspiring a higher confidence in their ability to handle crimes of lynch-prvoking character by taking them up and disposing of them with becoming promptness. For instance, in our own city, within six weeks of the two crimes two men have been tried, one sentenced to be hanged and the other to be imprisoned for life. Lynchings will continue, doubtless, in ultra-fragrant cases, for generations to come, but there is surely arising a temper among the people to only suffer such summary proceedings in cases of exceptional horror and when the popular consensus is strong and deadly as Niagara's flood.—Atlanta Constitution.

VERY REMARKABLE CURE OF DIARRHOEA.
"About six years ago for the first time in my life I had a sudden and severe attack of diarrhoea," says Mrs. Alice Miller, of Morgan, Texas. "I got temporary relief, but it came back again and again, and for six long years I have suffered more misery and agony than I can tell. It was worse than death. My husband spent hundreds of dollars for physicians' prescriptions and treatment without avail. Finally we moved to Bosque county, our present home, and one day I happened to see an advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with a testimonial of a man who had been cured by it. The case was so similar to my own that I concluded to try the remedy. The result was wonderful. I could hardly realize that I was well again, or believe it could be so after having suffered so long, but that one bottle of medicine costing but a few cents, cured me." To the Democrats of the Sixth Congressional District.

The Democracy of Cumberland county will present to the delegates of the Congressional Convention to be held in Fayetteville on August 20, 1902, the name of one of its most distinguished sons. The name should arouse in every true Democrat a patriotic shout, for it recalls to all the old soldiers that best of friends, the lamented Edward J. Hale, who, throughout the war between the States, was their faithful friend, and who gave his all in support of the cause he held so dear. May E. J. Hale, the name we present, is the last surviving child, and he is an honor to the name. He possesses the same unselfish characteristics, his loyalty to true Democracy is past questioning; he is an indefatigable worker, a man of big brain, sound judgment, and in all respects the equal intellectually of any man in the State. He is a devoted North Carolinian and in all matters that will attend to her advancement she could have no truer or more ardent advocate. Personally, Major Hale has all the characteristics of the old time gentleman, affable in manners, courteous in all his ways, having the dignity that commands respect, he would be at once recognized in Congress as the type of the old school. It is such a man that our people should desire to represent them, for they could point with pride to them and say: North Carolina feels that in having her son she has added dignity to the House of Representatives.
Major Hale was educated at the University of North Carolina. There, he stood at the head of his class, graduating with the highest honors and his professors felt that there were high honors in store for him. But just as he had commenced to study law, the 'call to arms' came and he at once enrolled his name with the Fayetteville Independent Company and went with them to Yorktown. He was present at the Battle of Bethel, the first fight of the war, and with Lee at the surrender at Appomattox. His military career is familiar to all that has read Clark's History of North Carolina Regiments. He was in all the battles of North Virginia and there was no soldier more thorough in the discharge of his every duty. Time and time again he was congratulated for his noble deeds of bravery, and you will find among other tributes, the following, paid him by his gallant leader, General J. H. Lane. This is a tribute worthy of preservation and every Confederate should feel it an honor to cast his vote for such a true comrade. Read this extract from Clark's North Carolina Regiments; it is found in Vol. 4, page 470:
"After the line on the right of Petersburg had been broken he says: After the fall of Fort Gregg and the enemy had reached the river above and were inflating the inner line, the brigade was ordered to close to the right, the inner line had numerous high traverses and it was a fiery ordeal to all when they had to run around so many of them. It was of vital importance to hold the inner line until night that the army might withdraw under its cover across the only bridge left it over the Appomattox. Major Hale, the Adjutant General, mounted one of these high traverses and stood there until the whole brigade had passed, cheering the men as they gallantly moved to the right, and thus kept the enemy from entering the inner line. Exposed as he was for such a length of time and to such a heavy fire, his escape was miraculous. A monument has been erected in Savannah to Sergeant Jasper and others, and towns have been named after him, but his leaping the walls of Fort Sullivan and securing the fallen flag was as inferior to Major Hale's act, as the hotness of the fire and the length of the exposure in Jasper's case was less."
After the war had ended, Major Hale returned to his old home to find his father's fortune destroyed. His zeal for the Confederate cause had exerted the ire of Sherman and he left no stone to remain that would help him up again.
Today, the old walls of the Fayetteville Observer lie as Sherman left them, a constant reminder to the people of Fayetteville of the sacrifices that he (Mr. Hale) had made for the lost cause. Major Hale, like
