

CALL MEETING BOARD OF COUNCIL JUNE 1, 1915.

Upon motion of J. R. Wheeler and seconded by J. L. Wiggins, ordinance of April 13, 1915, (relative to cleaning stables) is amended to read as follows: "All stables and yards occupied by animals, must be cleaned, and manure moved out of town limits, once every (7) seven days, from MAY 1st to NOVEMBER 1st, and every [14] fourteen days from NOVEMBER 1st to MAY 1st. Each violation of this ordinance will be punishable by a fine of [$2.00] Two Dollars for each offense. Each days delay will constitute a separate offense."

This ordinance will go into effect June 8, 1915.

J. R. McMullan,
City Clerk.

WHEN THE PINCH COMES

ANY married couples have just enough to enjoy the bare necessities of life—no luxuries, few enjoyments, no savings.

When reverses occur, and the call comes for money, they are pinched, and misery and unhappiness begin to spring up in their lives.

So many people think saving in little items amounts to nothing. They hope to save when they get enough to save.

If you hope to have something more than the mere necessities of life when you grow older, you must save. We'll help you if you will take us into your confidence.

How and When To Water Horses

A reader asks: "When should a horse be watered, before or after feeding?"

The best answer would probably be, "water both before and after feeding," or "water the horse when he is thirsty."

If a horse has not been deprived of water for too long a time he will probably not drink too much, but if he has been deprived of water for too long he may drink too much if he is hot and the water is cold.

Owing to the small size of the horse's stomach the theory has been generally proclaimed that he should be watered before feeding and not after. He should be watered before feeding if he is thirsty and after feeding also if he is thirsty.

Experimental tests seem to indicate that the great advantages attributed to watering before feeding or the assumed disadvantages of watering after feeding are largely theory. It makes little difference when the horse gets his water, just so long as he gets it often enough. Many horses will not drink before eating, but will drink afterward, and in such cases they should be watered after feeding.

In winter, twice a day, or at most three times a day, is often enough to give a horse water, unless he is working extremely hard and sweating very freely; in fact, watering an idle horse once a day in winter is more likely to supply his needs than three times a day in hot weather. In hot weather watering five times a day is not too often for farm work stock.—The Progressive Farmer.

Kept His Whiskers Trimmed

"Marriage a failure? Mine never was. I don't intend it shall be." And this is why he was so sure: He kept his heart just as frank and true after he was married as he did before; he had time to trim his whiskers, and put on a clean collar every day; he took counsel with his wife every time he had an important project in mind; now and then he brought her a pretty flower for her hair or waist, even though it were no more than some wild blossom he had picked on the way home after the day's work was done; he never spoke of his wife as "her" or "she"; he "kept company" with his wife after marriage just as he used to; he paid more attention to his own wife when out in company than he did to anybody else's wife. How COULD marriage be a failure with a man who lived like that?—Clipping.

Stir Up Your Local Union Or Farmers Club

Now is a good time for increased zeal or activity in behalf of your local Union or whatever other farmers' club you are a member of, Mr. Farmer. It is doing good in more ways than you realize. If a farmers' organization accomplished nothing except to secure a better hearing for the farmer in legislative halls, it would be worth all its costs. The writer knows of his personal observation, a hundred times repeated, that measures for the farmers' benefit get scant attention if there is no organization behind them, but immediately become formidable when petitions from farmers' clubs, letters from Union members, etc., begin to pour in on the legislators.

You are also missing a great chance if you are not trying to make your club or local Union a means of business cooperation in a score of ways. Look over the following list of questions, see which ones suggest the best opportunity for practical cooperation among your members, and then keep pushing it until you win success—and then tackle another hard job and keep at it till you make a success of it also:

1. Are you buying fertilizers and feedstuffs cooperatively?
2. Are you planning to sell your cotton, tobacco, peanuts, or other stable crop cooperatively?
3. Have you any plans for marketing vegetables, poultry, eggs and other produce cooperatively?
4. Are you cooperating in the purchase and use of improved farm machinery?
5. Have you bought any pure-bred sires cooperatively?
6. Have you a cooperative telephone company?
7. Have you cooperative or mutual fire insurance?

It will take many sacrifices, no doubt, to make your local Union or farmers' club the effective organization it ought to be, but a better day is coming for the farmers and it can only come as a result of persistent, untiring, "keeping-everlastingly-at-it" on the part of such little clubs all over the United States.—The Progressive Farmer.
