riages of the official family drew up, and were entered by Mr. and Mrs. Russell Harrison, and Mr. and Mrs. McKee, Dr. Scott, the gray-haired father of Mrs. Harrison, Judge Scott, of Indiana, Mrs. Harrison's brother, private secretary Hallford and Mrs. Hallford, Miss Hallford and Lieutenant J. F. Parker, U. S. N., and wife, who is a niece of Mrs. Harrison.

Following them came the servants' carriages and those provided for intimate friends. There was no delay and all the carriages immediately drove off. Ten minutes later the Presidential party arrived at the One Hundred and Forty-Eighth street entrance to Willard's Hotel, and were escorted to a room which had been handsomely decorated in their honor.

It is located on the second floor in the southeast corner of the building. On a table in the interior of the room stood a large vase filled with American beauty roses. On the piano, mantel and window sills had been effectively arranged large bouquets of roses and lilies of the valley. In the corners stood several varieties of the Southern palm.

THE FIRST TO ARRIVE.
Gen. Harrison's immediate party was the first to arrive, and were soon followed by Mr. Morton's party and other members of the two households. After a few minutes spent in receiving the congratulations of privileged friends, General and Mrs. Harrison accompanied by the Senate reception committee, re-entered their carriages and were driven to the Executive Mansion. Great crowds of people blocked the streets in every direction, and as the distinguished party made their appearance they were received with cheers.

Scenes in the vicinity of the White House were PARTICULARLY INTERESTING.

The people began to assemble at the gates early in the morning, and as there was no effort to keep them out, they passed through and gathered about the doors and windows opening out on the portico. They were not allowed to enter the house, however, and had to content themselves with a partial view of the main vestibule with the stuccoed walls and stained glass partitions. About 1 o'clock the police appeared on the scene and cleared the grounds. Guards were stationed at all the gates and no one was allowed to enter after that hour except those connected with the ceremonies.

The Seventieth Indiana Regiment, headed by their band playing lively airs, marched into the White House grounds at 11 o'clock and took up a position along the eastern driveway.

At 10:30 o'clock the President-elect entered the grounds. He rode in a closed landau-buggy drawn by four beautiful gray horses, and was accompanied by senators Hoar and Cockrell, of the Senate inaugural committee. The main doors were thrown open and they were soon joined by President Cleveland and his cabinet. A second closed landau drawn by four spanking bays drove up to the White House immediately behind General Harrison's carriage. In it were Vice-President-elect Morton and senator Cullom, of the committee. They also proceeded to the Blue Parlor.

As the carriages entered the grounds the Seventieth Indiana Regiment drew up in line and saluted the President and occupants of his carriage as they passed. Their recognition of Gen. Harrison, their old commander, was particularly enthusiastic.

At 11 o'clock the President's carriage drawn by the well-known seal browns and two fine bays, and driven by Albert Hawkins, the President's coachman, drew up at the entrance and the party within were informed that everything was in readiness for their departure to the capitol. There were about twenty people on the portico, including correspondents and policemen, and at a given signal a passage way was opened. The carriage party walked out in the following order: President Cleveland with Senator Cockrell, President-elect Harrison with Senator Hoar, Vice-President-elect Morton with Senator Cullom, followed by members of President Cleveland's cabinet in couples.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND
Was the first to enter the carriage. He was followed in the order named by Gen. Harrison and Senators Hoar and Cockrell. The President and General Harrison occupied the rear seat with the former on the right. Senator Cockrell sat opposite him, and Senator Hoar sat opposite Gen. Harrison. They all wore heavy coats, closely buttoned. Senator Cockrell wore a large slouch hat, but all others wore the regulation beaver.

A LARGE WHITE BEAR-SKIN RUG
Was thrown in the carriage with them, and as an additional protection against rain, two umbrellas were raised. President Cleveland held one over Gen. Harrison and himself, and the other was held by senator Cockrell over himself and senator Hoar. President Cleveland seemed in good spirits. The President's carriage then went ahead a short distance, and the second carriage drove up for its occupants. These were Vice-President-elect Morton and senator Cullom. Both gentlemen were heavily clad and had an umbrella raised. Their carriage, like its predecessor, was an open landau. There were five other carriages. Secretary Bayard entered the first of these, with assistant secretary Moore. The second contained secretaries Whitney and Endicott, the third, secretary Fairchild, the fourth, secretary Vilas and postmaster-general Dickinson, and the fifth, attorney-general Garland and secretary Coleman.

Mrs. Cleveland and Mrs. Folsom witnessed the embarkation of the party from an upper window, and seemed to be specially interested in the proceedings.

When the President was fairly seated he glanced up at the two ladies and raised his hat. They both returned the salute, smiling and waving their handkerchiefs. Mrs. Cleveland watched the carriages drive away and waved an adieu to the occupants of each. She also returned with a smile the salutation of the several correspondents who craned their hats to her as she turned away. In the meantime the two carriages containing the Presidential party had taken their positions in line. The Seventieth Indiana Regiment formed into two sections of two companies each, one preceding and the other following the two carriages. Word was then given and the party moved to the avenue and joined the first division in the place assigned to it. As the first carriage entered the avenue

A GREAT SHOUT
Rose from the assembled multitude that was continued for some time. The carriages containing the cabinet officers waited until the entire first division had passed and then entered the line. Promptly at 11 o'clock the escorting party began the march to the capitol. A file of mounted police cleared the way for the Third Regiment of Artillery, U. S. A. Then came the naval contingent, a magnificent marine band playing gaily and almost filling the avenue. Between the curbs, swept along in front of the marine battalions, all clad in soldierly blue, six hundred seamen with cutlass and carbine, following in marching lines that compared favorably with any other body in the procession.

Following was a light battery of sailors, sixteen in line, tugging at six shining brass howitzers. General James A. Beaver, chief marshal of the day, with brigadier-general Daniel Hastings, chief of staff, special aids and aides-de-camp, mounted on high stepping horses, came next in order, immediately preceding seventy-five of the personal escort of the President-elect. The President and President-elect, and vice-President-elect, in their carriages, were sheltered by umbrellas from the penetrating rain, but were plainly visible to the populace, which cheered and shouted its welcome at every step.

Another section of the escort marched behind. The third brigade of the first division was made up of the District of Columbia National Guard, under command of General Ordway. A Gatling gun battery, with their curious death-dealing machines, brought up the rear of the first escorting division.

The plaza in front of the capitol and adjacent sidewalks, porticos and every coigne of vantage from which even a glimpse of the Presidential party could be obtained was black with people. The police were kept busy clearing the roadway along which the escorting procession was to move. The organization to take part in the return parade, marched with bands playing side by side down the streets and avenues to the places adjoining the capitol grounds where they were to assemble. On all sides there was a commingling of marching, music and perfect babel of musical chords and discords. The shrill pipe of the fife, rap of the drums and blare of the trumpets filled the air. The noise of the bands was drowned at intervals by the hoarse roar of the crowds, as it greeted with applause some favorite organization. At 11:45 o'clock the music of the bands and cheering of the crowd announced the arrival of the van of the escort to the President's party. At that time the chief of the capitol police, attended by six of his assistants, descended the marble steps of the east portico of the Senate wing to keep the crowd from intruding itself within the prescribed limits.

A few minutes later the head of the approaching procession made its appearance, having left Pennsylvania avenue and going through the southern part of the capitol grounds, passing the House of Representatives, and coming up the east front to the Senate portico. At eight minutes to 12 o'clock, while the rain was falling the heaviest and the crowd cheering the loudest, the Presidential party made its appearance. President-elect Harrison and vice-President-elect Morton acknowledged the applause of the multitude by raising their hats and bowing. After going through the door President Cleveland went immediately to the President's room in rear of the Senate lobby, and President-elect Harrison and vice-President-elect Morton went to the vice-President's room at the other end of the lobby, and adjoining the marble room.

AT OPERA HALL.
Presentation of "Damon and Pythias" This Evening.
John Banim's great play of "Damon and Pythias" will be rendered by a company of home talent, at opera hall this evening. The cast as follows, being well-known to our citizens, will insure without further comment a large and appreciative audience, and the performance being given under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias will readily suggest to all unfamiliar with the plot, its character it being one of intense interest. Pythianism having been founded upon the principle of friendship therein demonstrated.

The Bill Passed.
A private telegram received by a gentleman in this city yesterday, contained the information that the bill validating the Allison and Blount grants, in the counties west of Buncombe, had passed the Senate, and thus become a law. This secures the people of the counties named, the property which they now own and have possessed for years.

Valuable Property Sold.
Rt. Rev. Bishop Leo Haid, through Rev. Father White, has purchased the E. J. Armstrong and Presbyterian lot, corner of Haywood and Flint streets. Father White will have the parsonage completely renovated at once, and in the near future will erect on a part of the lot, a beautiful chapel. We congratulate our Catholic friends upon the acquisition of this valuable property.

Returning Home.
The sorrowful widow and sons of Rev. Joseph E. Carter, deceased, reached the city on Sunday evening, on their return from Murfreesboro, N. C., whither they had gone to inter the remains with those of his kindred. They spent the night at Dr. Carroll's, and left for their desolate home at Hendersonville, yesterday morning.

Leuten Services.
Trinity P. E. Church—Ash Wednesday, 10 a. m. Friday, 10 a. m. All other days, 4:30 p. m.

Capt. Joseph S. Adams has returned from Statesville.

"Harrison weather," was what they called it yesterday.

Be sure and see "Damon and Pythias" at Opera Hall this evening.

At four o'clock yesterday afternoon only two rooms were vacant at the Battery Park—so great has been the arrival of guests during the past few days.

Mr. Isidore Samper, son of the editor of Les Couriers des Etats Unis, of New York, who has been spending several weeks in Asheville, leaves for his home this morning.

At a meeting of the reception committee yesterday afternoon, all arrangements for the reception of the members of the General Assembly and State officials, were perfected.
