MUSTANG LINIMENT SHOULD ALWAYS BE KEPT IN SHOP, KITCHEN, STABLE AND FACTORY!

COURAGE.

Because I had to stand to defend, And will not let the lightning of life Blind me with burning wars, but look beyond Its truth and its error:

Because I live my head above the mist, Where the sun shines and the broad breeze blows, My every ray and every rhapsody bleat That God's love doth bestow:

Think you I find an bitterness at all, No burden to be borne, like Christian's pack? Think you there are no ready tears to fall Because I keep them back?

Why should I hug life's file with cold reserve, To crush myself and all who love me? Nay? A thousand times more good than I deserve, God gives me every day.

And in each one of these stolid hours, Kept bravely back, he makes a rainbow shine: Grateful I take his slightest gift, no tears Nor any doubts are mine.

Dark skies must clear, and when the clouds are past, One golden day releases a weary heart: Patient I listen, sure that sweet at last Will sound his voice of cheer.

Then wax we not with chiding, let us be: I must be glad and grateful to the end, I grieve you not your cold and darkness: use The powers of light befriend. —Celia Thaxter

Sagacity of Shepherd Dogs.

A gentleman who has had considerable to do with shepherds and drovers in England and Scotland, speaking of the story published in The Oregonian a day or two since about a dog separating the ewes and wethers of a flock by noticing the earmarks, says there is no doubt but what it is true. He has known dogs go into a drove of sheep which were marked with several different marks and single out every one bearing his master's mark. He says the shepherds train their dogs by taking them along when puppies under their care as they mark the sheep, and the dog is thus taught to distinguish marks. He says further that at the sheep market in Jalington drivers have their sheep marked with red or blue paint, and when the drives get mixed a dog will go into the band and bring out all his master's sheep, telling them by the color of the marking. Shepherd dogs are the most intelligent species of the canine family, and when they are brought up among herds of sheep and trained to take charge of them it is but reasonable to suppose that they might learn to notice marks of any kind on them.—Portland Oregonian.

A Terrible Battle with Rats.

Silas Berry, of this place, had an exciting fight with rats in which he won a costly victory. He works on a farm near by, and yesterday morning entered a pit in which brewer's grain is stored for feeding purposes. It is about ten feet deep and is entered by a ladder. When Berry reached the bottom a large rat ran up his trousers leg. He shook it out when its squeals brought hundreds of rodents to its help. Berry was in total darkness and was attacked from all directions. He at once shouted for help and began fighting as best he could. After twenty minutes his eyes were heard and he came. When he was taken out of the pit he was completely covered with blood. When fully convinced that he was safe he faintly dead away from joy. His body is covered with bites and scratches and it will be a long time before he recovers. Forty-eight dead rats, some of enormous size, were taken from the pit, having been killed by Berry in his desperate fight.—Newton Cor. Minneapolis Press.

Bogus Canvasbacks.

Brokers who have been dismantled by a stress of weather need no longer display their condition by eating sandwiches and beer for lunch. A well known Broadway restaurant has evaded a philanthropic scheme to hide the misfortunes of those of its customers whose eating and drinking are regulated by the price of stock. It daily receives a supply of the ordinary broad bill ducks which are now plentiful in Long Island sound. These are prepared in full canvasback form, with the accompanying diamond of fried hominy which ordinarily accompanies only the more aristocratic towel. They are served for 60 cents each, while canvasbacks can only be had for $4. When a regular customer in an audible voice calls for "a canvasback duck and a pint of extra dry," and then winks, he is served with a 60 cent broad bill and a 15 cent bottle of sparkling elder placed in a silver wine cooler and its label carefully removed.—New York World.

Conflicting Opinions of Matrimony.

I saw three curious things in the public library the other day. But the best thing I saw was a pencil marginal note to an article in Forum. The passage in the text read "To marry is not an obligation, as might be thought from current talk. It is purely optional. He who refrains from wedlock and fatherhood cannot, in the overcrowded state of the globe, be charged with a violation of duty to his fellow-men." The marginal note, in a woman's handwriting, ran thus: "The globe is not overcrowded and never can be; and the man who does not leave a life in his place or leaves this globe is a common murderer."—Chicago Journal.

A Large Globe.

In the center of the Champ de Mars at the forthcoming Paris exhibition, there is to be a terrestrial globe about 13 metres in diameter. It will be a representation of the world on a scale of one-millionth; that is to say, a million times smaller than the actual world. To give some idea of the proportion, the city of Paris will barely cover a square centimetre. The globe will turn on its axis like an ordinary school globe, and is certain to form an interesting feature of the exhibition.—Boston Herald.

California's Modern Amusement

Near Forest Ranch, in the mountains above Chico, resides a young lady who for grit and pluck will take off her hat to every man. The lady in question, Miss Kate Lucas, resides on a mountain ranch with her mother and brothers, the latter being engaged in furnishing the meat used by the large lumber crews high up in the Sierras. Miss Lucas is a tall, lithe and well built girl, with red, rosy cheeks, jet black hair, bright, flashing eyes, and is the acknowledged belle of that vicinity. She is an intrepid horse-woman, and rides fearlessly and alone over the mountain slopes and through the ravines. She seizes a saddle, and at times rides a fiery mustang without either bridle or blanket, simply using a lariat, the end tied around her horse's head and neck. She is a capital shot with the rifle and has worried many of the crack shots there by her unerring aim. She has been out with her brothers hunting, and very rarely failed to bag a deer or other wild animal which so abound in that section. Sometimes the young man assists in capturing the wild cattle when they are required for the market, and the lariat is twirled with a precision that often puts the vaqueros to shame. A few weeks ago, after a daring ride after a particularly wild and foot-footed steer, which showed flight from the start, the young lady laughed at the vaquero, who seemed afraid of the animal, and smilingly challenged him to throw a rope over the animal's head and ride him. The vaquero then displayed a piece of courage and daring worthy of the ancient Roman arena. Springing from her horse, she went up to the bound and bellowing beast, quickly and deftly tied a rope around his head and neck, and then told the vaquero to let him loose. This he did reluctantly, and the enraged steer was quickly on its feet, but equally as quick the fearless lass was on its back. Then commenced a ride that is rarely witnessed. For half an hour the wild chase and hide was continued—over hill and dale, through brush and canyon—when the steer gave completely out and the triumphant girl led her captive to the house. It was a bold feat, and the daring rider has made herself famous in that section of the country.—Chico (Cal.) Enterprise.

Ancedotes of General Grant.

General Grant, on his return to this country, is said to have been severely afflicted with a cough contracted while crossing the ocean, and which had stubbornly refused to yield to any treatment. A friend procured for him a bottle of Symphax, and by its use in a few hours he was entirely relieved. He remarked to his friend: "Men look upon me as a great soldier, but this bottle of Symphax is greater than I. My calling has been to destroy men's lives, but this medicine is a victorious savior of men. I shall never be without it again."—d&w

WESTERNER.—"Yes sirce. The whisky is better than it used to be."

Two Amiable Queens.

The queen of Saxony (who was the Princess Vasa, once wooed by Napoleon III) has a very homely and house-wifely taste. She is extremely fond of making preserves, and actually at one time nursed her health by spending too many hours over her preserving kettles and charcoal furnaces. But within her manners are peculiarly royal and gracious. She possesses to perfection the art of making a bow that shall include in its salutation every member of an extensive circle.

The late queen of Holland, the first wife of the reigning sovereign of that country, was a most intelligent and accomplished princess, devoted to literature and fully competent to share with her husband in the cares of state. There are letters extant which she wrote to Napoleon III on the subject of the then pending war with Prussia. Had the French emperor hearkened to the advice which these letters contained his son might today be reigning over France. Yet this lady, of masculine vigor of mind and intellect, was altogether feminine in her pursuits. She delighted in embroidery on canvas, and one of the drawing rooms in the beautiful palace near The Hague called "The House in the Wood" is furnished throughout with her work. The furniture coverings and the bands that border the curtains show a pattern of clusters of cherries executed in worsted work on a ground in basket stitch of white floss silk. The queen was a great friend of the American historian, Motley, and placed "The House in the Wood" at his disposal when he came to stay at The Hague.—Chicago Herald.
