Weather-Clear, K. v. RUCK, M. D., Observer, cent session of the Legislature saw fit to amend this law, so as to place these elec-tions, on the odd numbered years. In other words, they decreed that an elec-tion might be held in 1889, and not again until 1891, and so on.

Of course, we have no idea that the Prohibitionists of Asheville are at all resonsible for this Legislative amendment We are sure not one of them knew any thing about it, but we ask: ought they to avail themselves of the act when its effect is to violate a distinct understanding between the contending parties a year ago? We advise themstrongly not to do so. We understand that if there is no election this year, there can be none until 1891, but we submit that it would be better to yield that point, rather than give even the shadow of truth to the charge, that either party had failed to not absolutely in good faith towards the other. Suppose the case was reversed and the last election had given a majority in favor of prohibition? In that event we would have given to the license men the same advice we now tender to their adversaries. Never give any man an excuse to intimate that you fulled to abide by an agreement, either written or verbal, whether expressed or only implied. "Fint justitia ruat coclum."

We are told that petitions are being circulated, asking the county commissioners to order a local option election in June next. We sincerely hope they may not secure the necessary number of signatures, to accomplish this end. To explain our reason for this expression, it is needful to refer to the laws on the subject. In 1888, according to the statute then in force, an election was held, which all agreed should settle the question for two years thereafter. The majority at this election was in favor of license.
