HORACE GREELEY'S GRIEF.

Nos the Great Editor Sorrowed Over the Perhaps the most pathetic chapter in Mr. Greeley's life was the death of his idolized boy "Pick." His grief was al-most beyond control. Margaret Ful-ler, writing from Rome soon after the failure of the revolution of '49 to her nother, says: "Receiving, a few days since, a packet of letters from America, I opened them with more feeling of hope nd good cheer than for a long time The first words that met my eye past. The first words that met my eye were these, in the hand of Mr. Gree ley: 'Ah, Margaret! The world grows dark with us! You grieve, for Rome is fallen; I mourn, for Fickie is dead.'

"I have shed rivers of tears over the inexpressibly affecting letter thus begun. One would think I might have become familiar enough with images of death and destruction; yet somehow the image of Pick's somehow, the image of Pick's little dancing figure lying stiff and stark, between his parents, has made me weep more than all else. There was little hops that he could do justice to himself, or lead a happy life, in so perplexed a world; but never was a character of richer capacity—nevera more charming child. To me he was nost dear, and would always have been so. Had he become stained with earthly faults, I could never have for gotten what he was to me when my soul pined for sympathy, pure and un-alloyed. The three children I have seen who were fairest in my eyes, and gave most promise of the future, were Waldo (Emerson), Pickie, Hermann Clark—all nipped in the bud. Endless thought has this given me, and a re solve to seek the realization of all hopes and plans elsewhere; which re-solve will weigh with me as much as it can weigh before the silver cord is inally loosed. Till then, earth, our mother, always finds strange unex pected ways to draw us back to her bosoni-to make us seek anew a nutriment which has never failed to

Mr. Greeley himself, in his Recollec-

"I looked in vain through Italian galleries, two years after he was taken from us, for any parallel to his dazzling beauty—a beauty not physical merely, but visibly radiating from the soul. His hair was of the finest and richest gold: "the sunshine of picture" power glorified its sound, and the delinever glorified its equal; and the delicacy of his complexion at once fixed the attention of observers like the late N. P. Willis, who had traversed both hemispheres without having his gaze ar rested by any child who could bear a comparison with this one. * When at length the struggle ended with his last breath, and even his mo ther was convinced that his eyes would never again open on the scenes of this world, I knew that the summer of my life was over, that the chill breath of its autumn was at hand, and that my future course must be along the downhill of life." The following letter, which is up dated, was evidently written in reply to one of condolence: "Your letter, dear R., was written in your noblest spirit. I thank you warmly for your sympathy. What he was to me, even you can hardly dream; you that have two sons, in which the WHISKIES, : BRANDIES : AND : WINES, natural thirst of the heart was earlier satisfied, can hardly know what my one ewe lamb was to me. That he might live, that I might grow daily better for his sake, that I might not spoil him by overweening love, were ever recurring thoughts. God be mer-ciful to me a sinner."—New York Tribune.

Umbandine, the Swazie King.

A beautiful young wife of the king's had in some innocent way displeased The order was given to smell her out, and the witch doctors did their horrible work. Executioners were told off, and they were sent out to the young wife to tell her of her sentence. She dressed herself in her best ornaments, and determined to appear before the king to say "Good by. She had been the ruler's playmate and favorite sweetheart as a child, and she ventured to send a message to him asking permission to say "Good-by" to him. The king refused the request. Calmly preparing for death, the young woman disregarded the denial, and walked to where his "majesty" was sitting, drinking champagne. She said to him: "King, I have come to say 'good-by;' tell me why you are killing me."

The king vouchsafed no answer, and turned his face away. The poor wo-man proceeded to bid adieu to the other wives and girls of the monarch They stood in a row, and as she walked down in front of them she said: "I am the first, but there will be more of you to come after me." Without an other word she quietly followed her executioners. They led her about three miles from the kraai, across the Tillan river, and there hanged her on a low thorn tree. The reim by which she was suspended being too long, her feet nearly touched the ground, and strangulation was completed by beating the reim with sticks, the person of royalty being sacred to the common touch .-South Africa.

Mr. Bright's Speeches.

Above twenty years ago I was talk-ing with Mr. Bright in the smoking room of the house of commons. was going to speak later on in the evening, and he had a large roll of notes which he was looking through. "I never learned a speech but once," he said, "and then I did not remember it. But I consider that no one ought to address the house on an important issue without thoroughly getting the subject into his head, and knowing how he intends to treat it." "You write down some passages," I said, pointing to the notes. "Yes," he replied, "I do, otherwise I might say more than I intended." And then he went on to explain that his greatest difficulty in mastering the art of which he had become sugh a master had been to acquire the habit of speaking slow ly. "You should not make pauses be tween words and sentences," he went on to say, "but pronounce distinctly every syllable."—London Truth. MRS. S. STEVENSON
