MISCELLANEOUS.

In our dealings with the public we realize that the most scrupulous care and honesty are paramount in importance. If these are virtues in all ordinary business transactions, they become sacred duties in Pharmacy, and without them no one can be a true Pharmacist. Every one must realize that the health, maybe the life, of those dealing with us depend upon them. Pharmacy is not a trade but a profession, and as such we confine ourselves to it alone. Hence it is our work, our constant study as well as our duty to shun adulterations and spoils as well as inferior drugs. We assure ourselves of the purity of an article before it is made use of. I am ably assisted at the prescription counter by Mr. H. M. P. Clark, an experienced prescriptionist. If your prescriptions are left in our care you can positively depend upon the purity of every preparation used and that the greatest care will be exercised in all directions so as to secure all possible safeguards.
