THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1890.

The answer that came to the lips the assembled thousands at the Fayette ville Centennial, when it was accepte as a disappointing and inevitable facthat the late Jefferson Davis could not be present, "Well, Zeb Vance is to be here ain't he?" is expression of the sentiment admiration and attachment which an mates nearly every North Carolina democrat; and not a few republicans. The feeble effort to arouse against him a feeling that might prejudice his next election is whistling against the wind. It is in vain to seek to displace him so long a he has the will and the health to serve The people of the State are proud of him for the talents which give him compicuous place among the eminent men of the United States Senate; they are proud o him because they see him equal to every position in which he has been placed rising as he did at the last session to the leadership, in that most trying tes of statesmanship in the discussions of the tariff, taking the place of Mr. Beck to whom the conduct of that question had been assigned, and by his learning on a subject requiring so much abstrusstudy, his happiness of illustration, his aptness in reply and his forcible eloquene rising to the heights of national reputtion; they are proud of him because h place maintained without a stain upon I name and fame unsulfied public virts and unimpeachable private character and they love him, because under all co cumstances he is the true, faithful, de voted North Carolinian. Watching his through his long careeer they can fix a measure to the bounds of his greatness for his course has been steadily onwar and upwards, new stores added to be learning, new wisdom added to his expe rience, new polish added to his nativ lustre, new arder added to his patrio ism, strengthened pride and affection to the State that has so delighted to home

The sentiment towards Zeb Vance a mingled one of admiration, confidence and affection. To disturb that sent ment that some untried aspirant may succeed to honors so brilliantly won an so worthily sustained by Zebulon B Vance is inconsistent with the conservaative temper of the people of North Carolina who are in the habit of provin, what is good, and holding tast to that which is worthy. We believe that as relates to Senator Vance, so long as he desires the renewal of his honors, the uni ted voice would be "esto perpetua."
