in one common burial ground, from gen eration to generation, until, in process of time, there comes to pass such a con fusion of remains that identity is lost. and this fact among others has led to the variety of suggested reforms in sepulture; for if the grave does not secure distinctive immunity, why perpetuate : method which falls short of many of its most cherished expectations? Between the surviving living and the cherished dead there is perpetuated, or hoped to be perpetuated, an unbroken link, to be kept bright by care of the sacred grave. watered daily with tears kept verdant with the living turf, brightened with the rich and fragrant flowers. Our colored fellow-citizens here at the North must chiefly secure the betterment decay, the gradual absorption of the of their own condition—and they can do it. It is of little use to complain of a lack of consideration and to stop with mortal frame, there should be in the same spot-and it is often the case in thickly tenanted graveyards-antecedent rethat. This will secure little attention mains of bodies unknown to the mournand no relief. They must compel respect and consideration by solid merit and suc ers, those connected by no possibility of cess. On this ground alone can they prevail. Nor will success come quickly but only as the result of long and patient effort. There is wrong and foolish pretender association ? And then the pious care resolves itself into an almost ludi crous worship of a false idol, or an empty adice to overcome which only time and substantial achievement can remove.

sepulchre. Perhaps this very confusion, and this inevitable existence of a "valley of dry bones" in every long tenanted cemetery. has led more potently than any other influence to the abandonment of the churchyard grave, and the general resort to the rural or adjacent cemetery. And to this we give our preference beyond any other form of the disposition of the dead. There is no such pressure upon us as there is upon the huge cities where increase of the living presses conwhere increase of the living presses con-stantly upon the reservations for the dead, involving inevitably detrimental sanitary results. In our smaller South-ern towns the suburban cemeteries can be used for many generations, to be cherished and beautified as the silent cities of the dead. Through its streets we walk silently, reverentially or tear-fully. The link between us and the dead remains strong and bright, and every-thing invites so to keep it. All the repul-sive suggestions of the grave are ban-iahed by the solemn stillness, the eloquent memorials, the carpeted verdure, the cheerful flowers. We walk among these reading the speech in full. The Sun says cheerful flowers. We walk among these last resting places as among the abodes of friends from whom he have just parted, who have just gone before, whom we shall soon rejoin. The prosperity are not imperiled by the presence of the African in great numbers, what he advises practically is that the South should voluntarily pass through a second reconstruction era. Though he knows better—and shows it in his speech-be agents in that the race
