THE DEBATE ON THE PROPOSED WORLD'S FAIR.

Two Bills Presented—Mr. Candler Makes the Opening Address and Makes a Grand Speech.—The Senate has a Warm Session.

WASHINGTON, February 20.—SENATE.—The resolution heretofore offered by Mr. Chandler calling on the attorney general for information as to the assassination at Quincy, Fla., of W. B. Saunders, United States deputy marshal, was taken up and Mr. Fessenden made his remarks in regard to it. He sent to the clerk's desk and had read various documents, newspaper articles and proceedings of public meetings, denunciatory of the conduct and character of the United States court and its officers in the northern district of Florida.

These representations (he said) might be to throw some light on the cause, leading up to that sad affair at Quincy. He knew nothing of the matter himself, but he did know that Saunders had not exhibited his unfitness for the office which he held. If the killing of Saunders was the result of the facts set forth in the various papers read, he considered that the senate ought to have all causes which had led up to it. The responsibility of Judge Swayne, Marshal Mizzell and Clerk Walter ought to be ascertained, as they had been shown to be connected with a partisan prosecution.

The great trouble in the case was that the principal law breakers were officers of the court. These officers would have to be compelled to obey the law, to recognize the statutes of the United States which they would have to learn that the administration of justice had to be based upon the law of the land. Whenever there was a violation of the law, it was administered unjustly and unfairly, and no difficulty in having its writs annulled or its officers removed by the people of Florida.

In conclusion he offered an amendment directing the attorney general to inform the senate also whether any efforts have been made by the department of justice to correct the action of the officers of the court which has resulted in partisan justice, made up mainly from one political party, and if so, to report the same to the senate; also directing the attorney general to inform the senate whether he had any information of an official letter written by Marshall Mizzell and Clerk Walter to the effect that the names of "true and brave republicans" be furnished for jurors of the United States court, and what action the department of justice had taken in reference to communications of that character.

Mr. Hawley followed with a tirade of personal abuse on Mr. Fessenden and the discussion was continued by Messrs. All, Pardo, Hawley and Chandler. Finally, Mr. Call moved to refer the resolution to the judiciary committee. The motion was rejected by a vote of 53 to 17, yeas 29.

On motion of Mr. Chandler Mr. Fessenden's amendment was laid on the table, yeas 29, yeas 18, and the resolution calling on the attorney general for information as to the assassination of Mr. Saunders was agreed to without discussion.

Mr. Blair then began the discussion of his educational bill. He declared that the Catholic masses were in favor of the bill. They were for free schools. Most of the greatest men of the Catholic people were in favor of the bill. At the close of Mr. Blair's speech Mr. Faulkner obtained the floor to speak on the bill, and the senate at 5:30 adjourned till to-morrow. This was the eighth day of Mr. Blair's opening argument in support of the educational bill. He commenced it on the first day of the debate, but there were some days when by reason of the senate going into executive session, he was prevented from continuing his remarks. Exclusive of the report to-day, the speech had filled seventy-nine pages of the congressional record, some fifty-six of which consisted of the papers that he had read, and tables that he had inserted.

HOUSE.—By special order, to-day was set apart by the house for the opening of the debate on the report of the committee on the World's Fair, the public evidently entertained hopes of an interesting discussion, for the galleries were well filled with spectators. The attendance of the members, when the speaker's gavel called the house to order, was rather scant. But the members present were evidently busily engaged in preparing for a struggle which was to settle the question as to whether the fair is to be held in 1892, and if so, at what place.

Mr. Candler, of Massachusetts, chairman of the special committee on the World's Fair, was armed with a large roll of manuscript, presumably his speech, but he gave up the roll as he was unable to give over it, as he was beset on all sides by the members who wished him to allow them a few moments to discuss the report. Not many of these applications were granted, however, as most of them had already been allotted. The usual preliminary routine business was transacted by the house with a show of importance.

view he had read a decision made in the forty-ninth congress embodying his opinion.

Mr. Kilgore, of Texas, rising to a point of order, said the pending bill was one authorizing the government to go into the fair business. He therefore raised the question of consideration of a division which had and 138 members voted to consider the fair bills, while but 21 members voted against the special order. Mr. Kilgore made the point of no quorum at the clerk had meanwhile been quick counting the members who did not vote.

The speaker overruled the point, and the special order prevailed.

Mr. Mills, of Texas, demanded half the time in behalf of the opponents of the bill, and said that the presiding officer should in fairness recognize the opponents of the bills during half of the time. The speaker replied that he did not doubt the expectations of the gentleman would be recognized to the extent of the time. He preferred an arrangement to be made. Mr. Candler offered to give the opposition two hours, but Mr. Mills did not think that was a fair division. The speaker said that the question was two-fold; first, as to whether the fair should be held, and second, as to what point in the country it should be held. The speaker thought that the debate should be so arranged as to give the fullest information to the house upon the points it desired to be explained. No arrangement having been reached, Mr. Candler took the floor and opened the debate. He said that the country courted the rivalry of the two cities. They were working for local interests, but they were also animated by the spirit of patriotism. The fair itself would be an honor to the United States wherever held; each of the four cities would do its best.

The bill presented to-day was one adapted to New York, Chicago, St. Louis, and the other to Washington. Mr. Candler took up the first bill and explained its sections briefly but succinctly. He said that the government was to lend its aid to people, to dignify and give national recognition to the great and useful enterprise of the World's Fair. It was not for the purpose of making a profit, as one who would detract the expenses of the government exhibit and display of works of art. It bound the government in no way to financial obligation. There was no proposition, direct or indirect, in the bill to secure a dollar from the government for any purpose not clearly stated in the body of the bill.

Mr. Candler's speech was warmly received and the bill was passed by a vote of 103 yeas to 89 nays. Mr. Blair's speech was warmly received and the bill was passed by a vote of 103 yeas to 89 nays.

most or west of this great American republic of our day, to the material wealth, to the glory and grandeur of the Union." Just here, said Mr. Flower holding up a telegram, "I am informed that Governor Hill has signed the fair bill." (Applause.)

The argument in favor of New York was taken up in turn by Mr. Moore, of New Hampshire, Messrs. Covert, Cummings, Tracey, Quinn and Sherman, of New York, and Mr. McAdoo, of New Jersey.

Mr. Hill, of Illinois, opened for Chicago. He said that Chicago was a great interior city, the exact center of the United States, and a short distance southeast of the New Hampshire line, Messrs. Covert, Cummings, Tracey, Quinn and Sherman, of New York, and Mr. McAdoo, of New Jersey.
