FRIDAY FEBRUARY 21 1890.

MR. EWART'S LETTER.

In fairness to this gentleman, we give the following letter from him in reply to one we published from the New York Times the same prominent position given to the other. If the Times letter is the production of "one of the numerous newspaper jackals," then Mr. Ewart has made a sufficient and satisfactory reply, for we have no more respect for that class of writers than he has, and are glad to give him the opportunity to vindicate himself. If, however, the writer is one of his own party, as is generally assumed to be from particularities of specifications, then the charges must be sustained, or else leave the victory with Mr. Ewart.

WASHINGTON, February 18, 1890.

Col. J. D. Cameron, Editor Citizen:

In your issue of the 14th inst., appears a communication copied from the New York Times, purporting to have been written from Asheville, N. C. As you have given that communication the position in your editorial columns, thereby giving it a quasi endorsement, it would seem an act of simple justice to a political opponent that he should be heard briefly in reply. I desire simply to say that this communication was never written, or sent from Asheville, but emanated from one of the numerous newspaper jackals that infest this capital who, for a moment of consideration, paid by a clique of unscrupulous and disreputable assistants for office in North Carolina, wrote the slanderous and venomous letter published in the New York Times. I have been in politics long enough to know that it is a foolish policy to rush into the newspapers to answer every silly campaign lie that may appear. If I attempted the task of answering all the baseless and contemptible falsehoods that will be uttered by my friends "the enemy" in the next few months, I should certainly be kept very busy. In this particular instance I should allow the "lie" to go unanswered, but that I desire my friends in both parties to know that this alleged Asheville correspondent has no existence in fact, but that the writer of this false and slanderous communication is the paid hireling of a small clique of reckless and disappointed office seekers in North Carolina, who, despicable cowards as they are, shelter themselves behind an anonymous newspaper correspondent in making their false and slanderous charges. Further, I wish to say that the charge that I received money in the last campaign and used it illegitimately either to satisfy personal obligations, or as a corruption fund, is as utterly false as the statement that I was peridious, or treacherous, to such men as Rollins, Smathers, Patterson, Cooper or Hardwick, some of whom now occupy important federal positions secured by my endorsement, and all of whom, so far as I am informed, are today my political friends. The charge that I ever borrowed a dollar from Eaves directly or indirectly, or that Eaves, or any other applicant for office ever paid me a dollar for my official endorsement, or entered into any contract to do so hereafter, is a base, cowardly and contemptible lie. No man, save one lost to all sense of character and decency, will dare to make these charges over his own signature. It remains for a cowardly anonymous correspondent, whose name perhaps I will never know, to publish by innuendo and insinuation these false and scurrilous charges, which your journal, much to my surprise, has given a quasi editorial endorsement.

In conclusion I wish simply to say that I have never recommended any man for office in my district that I considered dishonest or unworthy. The statement by this alleged Asheville correspondent that the appointees from the Ninth district in the revenue service made by Governor Eaves are "creatures of the worst reputation in the whole section," is as you must yourself acknowledge a vile slander on such good and true men as Fritchard, Burch, Davis, Crawford, and others. I cannot now recall a single instance, nor can you after the closest investigation, which I challenge you to make, name a single instance where I have recommended a man of bad reputation for a revenue appointment. On the contrary, I have been particularly careful to give my personal endorsement only to such men in my district as I know to be both capable and honest. I am informed by Internal Revenue Commissioner Mason that the personnel of the service was never better in the Fifth district than now, and that the administration of Collector Eaves is entirely acceptable to the government.

I am, Very Respectfully,

H. G. EWART.

THE NORTH STATE AND SENATOR VANCE.

We are gratified in quoting the following remarks by the North State on the speech of Senator Vance. The comments are those of a statesman, not of a partisan. It is true that there is implication that Mr. Ingalls was injuring the republican party by his course; but we believe the North State rather inclines to the broad minded view that he is injuring the whole country by constant appeals to partisan bitterness; because suggesting no wise solution of what is called the negro problem, the true solution of which is expressed by Senator Vance in two words, "Hands off."

The North State says:

The speech of Senator Vance, delivered in the United States senate the 30th of last January on the Negro Question, is of great interest and force.

Southern republicans who may read it and who are free from bitterness, must acknowledge that Senator Vance, on this subject, has expressed himself in the language and ideas of a generous man.

Don't know where we are?

Why, you can't miss it if you can't your optics down Main Street.

MARTIN'S MARKET.

and a statesman thoroughly conversant with the difficulties and complications surrounding and involved in the negro problem. Senator Ingalls' speech on the deportation of the negro fell far short of what any Southern man, irrespective of politics, would deem an intelligent and reasonable discussion of the subject.

Public men like Senator Ingalls who keep up sectional bitterness are not friends of the republican party or of the great republic. The negro receives more consideration and protection in the South than he would if he were white. If every negro in the South could by some magic mean an unquestioned member of the white race—his condition in politics and in society would be an hundred times more degrading and servile than it now is. This would be owing to his inexperience and ignorance. There are exceptional cases of inhuman and atrocious treatment of the negro in the South.

The new rules of the house are working as they were expected to work; as all rules will work where supreme power is placed in the hands of one arbitrary man, and that man delighted to carry out the will of a powerful majority, and delighted also in visiting its revenges upon a now prostrated minority. But that minority, though overwhelmed, is neither subjugated nor helpless, for it is on the watch to vindicate its rights through a power that Speaker Reed had not thought it worth while to consider, a coordinate branch of the government which can speak with authority when the occasion arises. The power of the judiciary may be rightfully invoked in a question of undue legislative power by either house of congress, even arising under rules such house conceives it has the right as well as the power to make, but which rules may encroach upon rights secured by the constitution, and this power under the new rules of counting a quorum when no quorum is present or no quorum votes is perhaps such violation of constitutional right as may justify interpretation by a supreme court.

Speaking on this point the New York World says:
As to filibustering there can be but one opinion, but the refusal of men to vote is not filibustering, nor is it that which has aroused the country's wrath. Dilatory motions, unless roll-called, the unnecessary reading of bills, the evils of which we have complained, and Mr. Reed and his subservient followers have adroitly confused with the right of the minority to compel the proper and orderly transaction of business with a full house.

The speaker has won the power from the house, but it is a power which the house cannot grant, so that every bill passed by this counting of a quorum will be invalid. The supreme court cannot sustain it, and it is very probable that much of the important legislation of this congress will be questioned in the courts. Meanwhile Mr. Reed drives his party as though it were composed of sheep.

The new States of North and South Dakota, while territories, were filled up so rapidly as to inspire to the early maturity of Statehood. Naturally, it was assumed they were everything that was desirable in soil and climate. The big wheat fields the world has ever known cover the land of both Dakotas; and they are without question productive. But experience has taught them they have the coldest weather, the fiercest blizzards, the most disastrous cyclones, the hottest summers, and altogether the extremest of miseries to be found in the whole union. To add to them they are covered with mortgages. The Baltimore Sun says:

No feed, no seed wheat, nothing but mortgages. The trail of the money lender is over it all, and at a good round sixty per cent. rate at that. Many persons have been obliged to live on short rations, and despite considerable outside aid there has been a great deal of suffering. At one point seventy needy families were supplied with the necessities of life, and many will be dependent upon outside aid till such times as assurance of a crop has braced up their credit.

The project now is to admit Idaho as a State. It can be done, perhaps ought to be done, if population be the criterion for admission, for Idaho has probably a hundred and twenty thousand inhabitants. If done, then the republicans will at first at all events, have two more senators. But is the west always to bow to the east? Are there not already signs of independent thought in the west on the subject of the tariff, the currency, and others which the east and west antagonize? Suppose such questions become sectional as they probably will be, so far as political interests conflict? Will the west always keep patiently in leading strings? If not, where is the republican majority?

The news from Rocky Mount is of a character to engage the interest of Mr. Chandler, or Mr. Hoar, or Mr. Ingalls, whose attention is so painfully drawn to the unhappy condition of the South. In that town incendiary fires have become of frequent occurrence, and a determination seems to exist to utterly destroy it by the midnight torch. It is a condition of things which might arouse congressional solicitude. But it so happens that the incendiaries are negroes, and therefore a deaf ear or a blind eye will be turned in the direction of the troubles. Perhaps Mr. Ingalls rejoices that the seed he recently sowed is germinating.

Miss Susanna Warfield, who composed the "great inaugural march" played at the inauguration of William Henry Harrison, has just died at Groveland, her estate near Skylesville, Carroll county, Md., in her 85th year. It is said that Dr. Charles Warfield, who was one of the party that burned the Peggy Stewart and her cargo of tea at Annapolis in 1775, was her brother, but if so, he must have been a half-brother, for unless he was a small boy at the tea party, there would have been near 40 years between their ages. The old lady was a niece of the beautiful Mrs. Sally Waters, noted in Maryland and Washington society.

Gratifying to All.

The high position attained and the universal acceptance and approval of the pleasant liquid fruit remedy Syrup of Figs, as the most excellent laxative known, illustrate the value of the qualities on which its success is based and are absolutely gratifying to the California Fig Syrup Company.
