It does not pay to advertise something you haven't got, or anything you cannot do and do well. The man who advertises a fraud must have a "good" fraud, and he who advertises bargains in goods must be prepared to satisfy his customers.

"Bill Arp" and the Farmers.

THE CITIZEN printed Tuesday, as it prints every week, one of "Bill Arp's" quaint and generally sensible comments on current affairs. The latest one, on the alliance, was probably as sincere as it was well meant. But Arp, though he has been a farmer for eleven years, just a fair apprenticeship, misses the mark when he says:

"I had one tenant who worked hard and prospered. I had two others who were always behind. They had a power of business at the mill or at town, or at some meeting house, and when the creek was muddy they were obliged to go sailing. Their crops were always in the grass, and they are in the grass yet I reckon. They belong to the alliance, and are waiting for something to turn up. This is plain talk, but it is true talk. The greatest enemy the farmer has got, is his own indolence. No man succeeds at anything who does not work diligently."

Bill Arp's farmer, it is pretty plain, would be a man who never left his farm, but worked at his crops from sun up till sundown—a dull, solid, hopeless machine, giving no special thought to his condition whether it could be bettered as much by brains in organization as by hard work. Of course, no man succeeds "who does not work diligently." That was a truism long before the days of Arp and will be for ages to come. But the diligent farmer is not necessarily the farmer who does not belong to the alliance. It may contain some chaff; there are precious few human haystacks and wheat bins that do not; but it is also probably true that it contains the pick and flower of the agriculturists wherever found.

"What," says Arp with a fine burst of sympathy, "is to become of them [working people who are not farmers] if the farmers get up a corner on the necessities of life?" Well, the working people will be as able to stand a corner manipulated by farmers as one brought about by "Old Hutch," or Armour, or Jay Gould, while they would have some consolation in the thought that the advance in price was not going into the hands of one man who had not earned a dollar of it, but into the pockets of men who had earned it and who as a class are far from living in luxury.

No, the farmer may never see his bonded warehouse scheme in bearing order, but he is right in seeking for legislation in his interests or, at least, in seeing that he is not too much legislated against. When the railway officials, the manufacturers, the bankers, the lawyers, the newspaper men, and who not, cease trying to influence legislation in behalf of their several interests, it will be time to call the farmer off.

The Killing of Gen. Barrandia.

The New York Sun says of this case: "Suppose that Inspector Byrnes and his officers, in attempting to arrest a desperate fugitive from American justice, who had taken refuge on board of the Etruria or the City of Rome, while the ship was at her dock in the North river, should kill the man then and there, would the British flag in that instance be outraged? Would the refugee be robbed of any protection to which he was entitled? Would there be a case for the interference of a British man-of-war which happened to be in the port at the time? Would the New York police have the right to attempt the arrest on board of the Etruria or the City of Rome, and to take the life of one who resisted with the revolver?"

The Sun's parallel is not parallel. Barrandia was not a "desperate fugitive," but a political offender. Moreover, if Inspector Byrnes should accompany his act by ridiculing the supposed power of English gun boats lying in the harbor, should row around them several times, meanwhile wriggling his fingers extended from his nose at their officers, we are inclined to think the United States would hear from England on the subject. The whole matter will probably turn on the question whether Barrandia was a political refugee. It is held that he was not, because, it is asserted, he went voluntarily into the jurisdiction of the country whose laws required his arrest and trial. If that be true probably the doctrine of political asylum has no application to the case.

THE CITIZEN publishes every Saturday a list—very incomplete as yet—of church announcements. We wish to urge it on every pastor in Asheville to send into this office early on Saturday the subject of his sermons for the following day, together with the hours at which the different services begin. This list is especially important, as it will prevent any misunderstanding as to the time set, and aid in securing punctual attendance.

SPEAKER REED could not tell the whole truth if he tried, apparently. He said in a speech at Philadelphia: "There has been, and is sitting to-day, in Mississippi, a convention where every orator proclaims his determination, and the determination of every white man belonging to his party, to invent some method to disfranchise the negro, to destroy the franchise of a large voting pop-

THE PARTY OF FORCE.

SPKAKER REED, THE LEADER OF THE REPUBLICANS. He is the Embodiment of its Purpose to Centralize the Government and to Give the Minority No Rights Whatever.

Mr. Blaine taught his party to consider business alliances as a legitimate substitute for political principles and Mr. Blaine, cherishing some memory of the traditions of a higher statesmanship, shrunk from its further application. Having pushed the protective policy to what at the outset seemed the furthest extreme, Mr. Blaine has come at last to hesitate. He is disposed to hedge. He is unable to shut his eyes to the fact that beyond and behind the protected manufacturers of the country there is a people to protect. He sees that the policy of special legislation for the benefit of a particular class has been carried beyond that point at which its tendency is to undo its work by the wailing in of our industries and the closing of our foreign markets to our goods. He seeks to temper the government bounty to individuals by government dickers for popular advantage; to offset protection with reciprocity. But the teaching he has so diligently inculcated is not restrained in the party by any such conditions. When he cries "Halt!" the command is received with impatience by those who see profit for themselves in going further.

HOW IT WOULD WORK.

One Feature of the Sub-Treasury Scheme. From an Alliance Man's Letter. Suppose a sub-treasury was established in Atlanta and in Savannah, and with one or the other of these sub-treasuries the national banks of the state had a credit equal to their capital stock, and that they could use the currency derived from this source only for the purpose of advances upon the great staple crops. Instead of sending to New York for currency, as they are now compelled to do, which to pay for cotton, they would be able, on the very class of security which they now accept, to obtain the currency directly from the sub-treasury, instead of from their eastern correspondents. There could be no drain for this currency upon the financial centers. Cotton would move just as it moves now, and when it finally reached the great markets and was paid for on an amount of currency equivalent to that advanced in Atlanta would flow back into some one or other of the sub-treasuries.

Just So.

From the New York Herald. "The south, which is quietly minding its own business, building mills on every stream, developing mines, raising crops beyond precedent, filling the market with valuable timber and growing rich by a thousand new industries, is infinitely more loyal to the republic than a party which takes to itself the credit of saving the union and then deplores the treasury in order to pay itself for its disinterested patriotism."

Needed Where He Is.

From the Florida Times Union. "The republican party hardly knows what to do with Quay. A man like him has become necessary to the successful application of its political methods. It can't afford to abandon its system of corruption, and Quay seems to be the only man fitted to do the dirty work. It's a hard case."

Where the South Leads.

From the Wilmington Star. "The south is practically mistress of the cotton trade, and as a result there is no one to successfully dispute her supremacy there."

Republican Undress.

From the Elmira Freeman. "The abolition and even the male, in congressional details is getting to be quite the fashion."

THE PARTY OF FORCE.

SPKAKER REED, THE LEADER OF THE REPUBLICANS. He is the Embodiment of its Purpose to Centralize the Government and to Give the Minority No Rights Whatever.

Mr. Blaine taught his party to consider business alliances as a legitimate substitute for political principles and Mr. Blaine, cherishing some memory of the traditions of a higher statesmanship, shrunk from its further application. Having pushed the protective policy to what at the outset seemed the furthest extreme, Mr. Blaine has come at last to hesitate. He is disposed to hedge. He is unable to shut his eyes to the fact that beyond and behind the protected manufacturers of the country there is a people to protect. He sees that the policy of special legislation for the benefit of a particular class has been carried beyond that point at which its tendency is to undo its work by the wailing in of our industries and the closing of our foreign markets to our goods. He seeks to temper the government bounty to individuals by government dickers for popular advantage; to offset protection with reciprocity. But the teaching he has so diligently inculcated is not restrained in the party by any such conditions. When he cries "Halt!" the command is received with impatience by those who see profit for themselves in going further.

THE MINORITY'S RIGHTS.

It is at this point that Mr. Reed has been quick to see and seize his advantage. He has no such scruples. He is willing to fulfill the contracts made by the party with the moneyed interests of the country. He is faithful to the alliance between the party and those monopolies which have lent the party financial support in its time of need. Furthermore, he represents in a degree which Mr. Blaine never could the traditional spirit and impulse of the party—the spirit and the impulse of arbitrary force. He does not believe in the rights of the minority, but the embodiment of the latter bill, which the party through congress without permitting its discussion and without any consideration even for the qualms of conscience manifested by men in his own party.

A PARTY OF FORCE.

In all this Mr. Reed reflects both the history and the present temper of his party. Its history from the days of federation until now has been that of a party of force; its policy has been that of centralization, of the enlargement of the federal power, of the arbitrary control of events in accordance with the will of those who have directed its destinies. Even in its dealings with the national finances it has diligently sought to accomplish results in themselves unrelated to the national finances, results beneficial to favored classes at the expense of the great mass of the people. It has not hesitated to repeal the natural laws of economics, and to substitute statutory laws of its own creation in their stead. Its tendency to centralization has been due, not to any theory or conviction with regard to the constitution of our federal republic, and not to any conception of ultimate benefit, but to the desire to satisfy its impatience with the slow methods of democratic liberty. It has always been in love with the short cuts of despotic rule, and it has persistently sought the centralization of power for the sake of the expedition with which centralized power may be used in the accomplishment of cherished purposes.

REED THE LEADER.

It is between this disposition—which is the logical outcome by development of all that has gone before in the history of the party—and the conservatism of older leaders like Mr. Blaine that the issue has been joined. And with the issue of tendency is linked the issue of personal ambition for party leadership.

In this contest Mr. Reed has won. He is the leader, the arbiter, the dictator, his person, his ideas, his temperament and his methods he furnishes the sole index to the future policy and history of the republican party.

This is the home of political reconstruction, the stage of an era given. "Choose you when ye will serve." Every citizen must now answer the challenge, "Under which flag?"—the flag of popular liberty, representative government, legislation by deliberative methods for the benefit of the whole people, or the maintenance of those principles of liberty on which our institutions are founded, or the flag of government by decree controlled by a permanently dominant party whose will is to be that of this newly installed leader.

A CRITICAL SITUATION.

There can be no question that when this issue is perfectly understood, many thousands who have hitherto followed the leaders of that party without question or doubt will find it time to alter their allegiance and to join in Mr. Blaine's cry of halt. On the other hand the admiration men feel for audacity and the instinctive love of men for daringly despotic methods will win to Mr. Reed's support many who have hitherto not been found in the republican camp. The readjustment will be considerable. It reflects remain to be seen. But so far as present politics is concerned the republican leaders of the past are leaders no more; their party has outrun them in the direction in which they set its feet. Mr. Reed is sole arbiter of the party's fortunes. He is a man of extraordinary force, and it is with a giant that those who struggle for the maintenance of democratic institutions in their integrity must henceforth do battle.

It has been many years since a situation so interesting and so critical has been seen in American politics. With what emotions the suppliant leaders, and more especially the one man who is the titular head of the party, view this manifest situation it is easier to imagine than to find out by any utterance of theirs. They are like the deers in this, that they are just now dumb.

The second article, which appears in the Magazine for October, is entitled "Agricultural Chili." It contains an account of a visit to the agricultural provinces of that country, describes the Chilians' methods of farming, irrigation, wine culture, etc., and states some interesting facts regarding immigration, labor, and wages. The description of some of the growing cities and towns, and Mr. Child's account of railway traveling in that region, will be read with surprise by many persons who are accustomed to regard the South American states as countries but little better than half civilized.

The article is very fully illustrated from drawings by T. de Thulstrup, W. P. Snyder, W. Hamilton Gibson, W. A. Rogers, H. Bolton Jones, Frederic Remington, George de F. Brush and T. V. Chominski.
