The writer says that Emin desired to explore the primeval forests rather than to re-turn to Wadelai. Owing to a lack of victuals, the earriers were compelled to retreat, and disease and famine laid the expedition open to frequent native at-tacks. Finally small pox broke out and this last difficulty compelled Emin in December to send Stuhlman in advance with the healthy members of the carayan. Much valuable and scientific and geographical knowledge has been gained by the expedition.
