EASILY MADE HAPPY.

How a Rich Man Learned Some !':ilosophy on a Rainy Day. A rich gentleman of my acquaintance got caught in the rain the other day while out for a walk on upper Broadway. He is not only rich, but eccentric, in that he rarely rides and that he walks great deal. The rain that for a long time fell gently increased in quantity and was caught up by the rising wind and shot into faces and doorways, where people hopefully huddled for the time, and beat upon the awnings and signs as if in mad desire to crush them and get at the hearts of those who had sought temporary shelter there. The gentleman, although protected by stout umbrella, was finally driven to one of these awnings, whence he peered up and down for any stray cab that night come that way.

By this process he saw a man coming down the street, dodging from awning to awning and doorway to doorway. There were hundreds of people going and coming, pushing or pulling umbrel-las, or who, enveloped from head to heels in waterproofs, went edging along with one ear turned down to windward, as if to split the storm. But this particular man commanded his attention because he had no umbrella and no waterproof and although the day was cold not even an overcoat. He ran awhile, then paused in some friendly shelter to repeat the run to the next, finally bringing up under the same awning with my friend. Like most rich men of the world my friend is suspicious of his kind unless they come properly introduced. But he looked at this specimen of humanity and saw at a glance that it was a very wet specimen, plainly and lightly clad, but with a frank, manly, German counte-nance. Not having been addressed by it he felt still more interested.

"Bad day for you," he said pleasantly.
"Yes, for anybody," replied the man, folding his arms across his water soaked

"Got far to go?"
"Right good bit," said the specimen.
"You'd better take a street car. Here comes one going right down Broadway. "No; I'm going over on the other side and then down the Bowery.' "Well, that is a 'good bit,' but you can get a car over there," remarked my

The specimen laughed. "A street car is too rich for my blood today," said he. "Oh, I've got the money," he added, seeing the cynical look that came into the gentleman's face, "but I want that for something else. That's the reason I'm footing it. I'll get wet, but when I get down to the place I can get dried out for a glass of beer."

The perfect confidence of the specimen in his programme elicited the echo:

"For a glass of beer?" "Oh, yes! You see, I don't stop at ar expensive hotel. It's the Palmer House. down in Chatham square, and-"Chatham square? Why, that's miles from here!" "I know that well enough, but I'll get there in an hour or two," was the cheerful reply. "When I do I'll buy a glass of beer, and they will let me dry out before the big stove. I can't get much wetter. If I took a street car, you see, I'd have no beer and no place to dry." He laughed

"You don't seem to mind it much." "Mind it! What's the use? I'll be fixed all right in a day or two. And as for a little water-faugh!" The specimen shook himself like a young spaniel. "Well, I must be running or I'll get cold," said he, and he started off without more pre-

"Hold on there!" shouted the astonished gentleman. "Come back here a mo-The specimen came slowly back but he shivered in spite of his air of indifference. "How much money have you got?" "Fifteen cents if I walk—ten cents if I ide," the specimen replied rather shamefacedly.

"Well, here; you ride." He put a half dollar into the specimen's hand. The specimen looked at it a moment like a flash, and catching the giver's hand before it could be withdrawn mutely pressed it to his liss. There had been nothing cringing if sycophantic or whining. There was nothing of the sort now. It was a grateful, impulsive exhibition of genuine graitude for just one instant; then with frank and glistening eyes ho sek; "Ride? Arad I'll eat too—and sleep in a bed! I'm! of appiest man in New York!" And " si pecimen, dash.ed down the street through the pelting rain, cut into Thirty-fifth street and disappeared to-ward the east side. And the rich gentleman looked up at the cloud riven sky shook the folds out of his silk umbrella and started buoyantly down Broadway, saying softly, "The happiest man in New York!"—New York Herald.

Letter of a Suicide. An octogenarian general left a letter lately defending the propriety of his suicide. Said he: When an individual life has run its cycle and become a waste of nature in the body, overwhelming its mental and physical qualities with weakness and pain to an intolerable degree, it may with all propriety be removed. Such being the case with the life of the writer, his apology to the world is by these terms made through his most beloved and most intimate friends, who, he trusts, will appreciate the relief to him from ceaseless distress, which, in his opinion, ought to be brought by the phyician who is summoned with his drugs, surely for that purpose, but not for cure .-Boston Globe.

A Snake in a Bag of Potatoes. A man purchased a bag of potatoes at the Cape Town market, and when the potatoes were turned out at his home he discovered that a puff adder was included in the bargain. That viper must have been callous indeed to have expended no venom during its transit, and it is to be hoped that the potatoes were well examined after being in such company. The colonists are wonderfully expert in dealing with such quarry .-

Bracelets and dudes are the latest combination. The bigger the bracelet the bigger the dude-that is, the larger the circlet the dude can keep upon his wrist without assuming the attitude of a man undergoing highway robbery the greater his claim to distinction in dudedom Twisted bands of silver wire, a half dozen, more or less, on each wrist, is the proper thing, though bands of gold, studded with brilliants, are occasionally worn. It is exceedingly "vulgah" to expose these ornaments to public gaze on the streets. They are only visible in the seclusion of the drawing room or the dude's own apartments. On going out the bracelets by a slight twist of the wrists are tucked up under the cuffs, which must be extra large. To execute this movement grace fully is a test which seems to distinguish the real from the spurious swell.

"Oh, yes," said a State street jeweler in answer to a question, "bracelets for men is a fad that is spreading rapidly It struck Chicago a month ago, but the swells have got it bad. We have done a rushing business in bracelets for the last ten days. Most of the 'fellahs' pretend they are buying for their sisters, but the solicitude they display in getting an article that will just fit inside their cuffs gives them away. Dread of street gamins, I suppose, prompts them to keep their arm ornaments concealed when out walking."—Chicago News.

Will Marry the Waif He Rescued. nomination to which he belongs is about to marry a young lady to whom he has gentleman, who is about sixty years of age, has devoted a great portion of his life to the rescue of poor boys and girls. Some twenty years ago or more he picked up a hungry, half clad, friendless but bright eyed little girl, and removed her to one of the homes of which he had oversight. The child was willing and eager to learn all that could be taught her. She developed in the course of years 17 SOUTH MAIN STREET, into an able and intelligent young woman, and in her turn became an instructress in the home to which she had been brought so many years before. She is still associated with the work, but she i engaged to marry the man who picked her, so to speak, from the gutter. An Important Question On the night of the big Twenty-third street fire Dr. Buddington, anxious to get home and not knowing any reason why he should not do so, pushed his way through the crowd. A policeman ordered him back, and on his failing a once to obey knocked him down. Dr. Buddington, under the influence of the stinging blows, struck the policeman and was at once handcuffed and taken to the station house. The question which suggests itself is, How long must an orderly and law abiding citizen stand being clubbed by a policeman before he has a right to defend himself?-New
