THE attempts to solve the problem of caring for the insane by burning them up still continues.

Queen in offering to sellout for spot cash and no questions asked. It shows that she thinks the "jig is up;" that she has no real love for her people and made a show of resistance in the case of the story goes, put it in the care of Lord Randolph Churchill, his younger I rother. Lord Churchill, at that time acting as secretary to his father, then Lord Licutenant of Ireland, guarded the bundle as best he could.

Is it parliamentary for a member of the Legislature not attacked by a public journal to ventilate his little personal spites under the plea of personal privi-lege? Is that the custom? Does the Speaker do right in allowing such an as-sault under such plea? Is it not a very unusual stretch of "privilege?"-Wilmington Messenger.

Why, bless you, it is parliamentary to all places. That is largely what it is fora sort of escape valve for put the opinion that otherwise might remain bested up and, in the end, do mischief. Besides, the abuse does no real harm; the newspaper goes on just the same if it has any genuine excuse for being, and the abuser feels relieved. Parliamentary? Why we have at a prayer meeting.
