DEMOCRACY'S BIG DAY

CLEVELAND COMMANDS THE SHIP OF STATE.

HE TAKES THE OATH OF OFFICE AT NOON.

THE PROCESSION MOVES IN A HOWLING GALE

WASHINGTON, March 4.—Grover Cleveland, of New York, thrice nominated President of the United States, and twice elected, was today successfully inducted into that high office for his second term, with all appropriate ceremonies and the gathering of a mighty multitude, and in spite of a howling gale of snow and wind.

The last occasion was greater than the first. It was more imposing in the military and civic display. In 1885 there were at the outside not more than 5000 men in line in the inaugural parade. Today, had the atmospheric conditions been anything like favorable, instead of being as bad as could possibly be, there would probably have been 60,000 men and a number of ladies marching or riding in the parade. They were all here waiting to fall in line, but at the last moment many of the organizations were compelled to desist from participation. Nevertheless the occasion was made memorable by the vast attendance. Today, also, the governors of eleven great States—New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and Massachusetts in the north and east; of Pennsylvania and Maryland among the middle States; of Georgia, North Carolina and Louisiana in the south; and of Wisconsin in the far west—participated in the national ceremonies and thereby emphasized the complete restoration of national unity. More interesting and significant even than this, perhaps, in the eyes of other nations and the historian, were the manifestations of marvellous growth of the country in population and power, and the fact that this momentous and majestic change in the government of 60,000,000 of people was accomplished according to a cut-and-dried formula, every step of which was planned and publicly announced beforehand, and without noticeable disturbance of public interests or the creation of any excitement, except that naturally accompanying a great national pageant and the influx of two or three hundred thousand sight-seers into the Capitol.

It Was Democratic Though.

The order of proceeding was almost identically the same as four years ago, with the exception of the chief participants reversed, and it differed very little, except in the extent of the demonstration, from the ceremonies of eight years ago, which brought Mr. Cleveland to Washington (on the 2d of March, 1885) for the first time in his public career. Time and that "capacious urn" of death which "keeps every man in motion," had wrought many changes in the interest, however. The most dramatic incident connected with Mr. Cleveland's first inauguration was the passage by the House of Representatives, under the skillful management of Speaker Randall, of the bill which authorized the placing of General Grant on the retired list of the army with the rank and pay of a full general; President Arthur's nomination of the retiring hero to the position of senator; and the Senate's immediate confirmation of the appointment, in open executive session, then and there held for the first and only time in this country, which was completed within a few minutes of the hour when the 48th Congress and the administration of President Arthur passed out of existence together, and while Vice-President Hendricks was waiting at the door of the Senate chamber to take the oath of office at the hands of Acting Vice-President Edmunds, and barely 20 minutes before Mr. Cleveland commenced reading his inaugural address from the east portico of the Capitol. Grant and Arthur, Hendricks and Randall, the chief actors in this memorable drama, have all since been taken away, and Senator Edmunds has retired to private life.

Four years later, when Mr. Cleveland in turn surrendered the chief executive office of the nation to Benjamin Harrison, conspicuous in the distinguished throng participating in the ceremonies in the Senate chamber, were Vice-President Hamlin, Gen. Tecumseh Sherman, James G. Blaine, William Windom, and John C. Fremont, each of whom has since passed to his reward. What changes another four years may bring none may divine, but the experience of the past is eloquent in its suggestiveness of the possibilities of the future.

More Gentlemanly Now.

There are four great leading features of every Inauguration Day: The closing hours of Congress, into which so much law-making and history are frequently crowded; the ride of the retiring President and the President and Vice-President-Elect with their military escort from the White House to the Capitol to lay down and take up the reins of power respectively; the pageant of the returning procession and review after the ceremonies are over; and the inauguration ball at night. Since old blunt John Adams, gripack in hand, "slid" out of the White House in the early dawn of March 4, 1801, to avoid extending to his hard rival, Thomas Jefferson, the hospitalities of the executive mansion, there has been no break in the uniform courtesy extended every four or eight years by the retiring chief to his successor, unless there be excepted the personal misunderstanding which arose between President Andrew Johnson and General Grant in the last days of the former's administration, which made their intercourse a frigid formality. In this year of grace, courtesy between the outgoing and incoming powers has reignited supreme, as witnessed in the banquet given by the Senate without distinction of party, to Vice-President Morton and Secretary Carlisle; the reception tendered by Vice-President Morton to Vice-President Stevenson and the marked civilities exchanged between Presidents Harrison and Cleveland. "A very sensible sugges-

CLEVELAND'S INAUGURAL

A SOLEMN WARNING TO THE AMERICAN PEOPLE

The President and President-Elect Drive to the Capitol in a Snow Storm—Sworn In—Proceedings in the Senate.

WASHINGTON, March 4.—It was shortly after 11 o'clock when President-elect Cleveland and Vice-President-elect Stevenson entered the executive mansion. They were received by President Harrison in the blue room. Five minutes later the President and his successor reappeared, and entering an open carriage drawn by four horses, the march of the procession to the capitol was begun. There was no abatement of the storm and the ride to the Capitol was through fast falling snow whirled in frequent gusts of high winds. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, Mr. Cleveland's hat was off frequently in response to the enthusiastic cheers of the "unfettered" who swarmed the sidewalks unmindful of the discomfort.

The Presidential party with their military escort came in sight of the eastern entrance of the Capitol a few minutes after 12 o'clock. A large crowd had assembled at the east front and cheered loudly as Cleveland approached. He went in by the basement entrance in order to avoid the somewhat slippery steps outside. When he entered the Senate wing the cheers of the outsiders gave away to an ovation. Harrison entered the President's room where he spent a little time signing bills. Cleveland and Stevenson meantime were entertained at lunch in the Vice-President's room.

When the Senate clock indicated 11:50, but when the actual time was 12:55, the President-elect was announced, and Stevenson, escorted by Senator McPherson, took his chair to the right of Vice-President Morton. Immediately afterwards the President of the United States and his cabinet were announced; and President Harrison and members of his cabinet entered the chamber. Harrison was escorted to one of the scarlet chairs standing in front of the clerk's desk. Immediately afterwards the President-elect was announced, and Mr. Cleveland, escorted by Senator Ransom, took the chair next to President Harrison. His entrance into the chamber was greeted with applause.

Then Vice-President Morton administered the oath of office to his successor and yielded him the chair of the presiding officer. The special session of the Senate of the Fifty-third Congress was then formally opened with prayer by Captain Butler. Vice-President Stevenson then rose and addressed the Senate. He said: "Senators: Deeply impressed with a sense of its responsibilities and of its dignity, I now enter upon the discharge of the duties of the high office to which I have been called. I am not unmindful of the fact that among the occupants of this chair during the one hundred and four years of our constitutional history have been statesmen eminent alike for their talents and their tireless devotion to public duty. Adams, Jefferson and Calhoun honored its membership during the early days of the Republic, while Arthur, Hendricks and Moton have at a later period of our history shed luster upon the office of President of the most august deliberative assembly known to men.

"I assume the duties of the great trust confided to me with no feeling of self-confidence but rather with that grave distrust of my ability satisfactorily to meet its requirements. I may be pardoned for saying that it shall be my earnest endeavor to discharge the important duties which lie before me with the less of impartiality and courtesy than of firmness and fidelity. Earnestly invoking the co-operation, the forbearance, the charity of each of its members, I now enter upon my duties as presiding officer of the Senate."

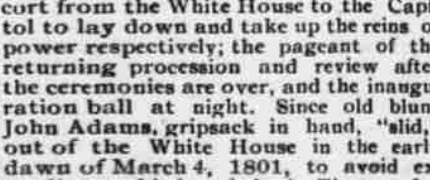

After his remarks the secretary of the Senate read the proclamation of the meeting of certain conditions and tendencies among our people which seem to menace the integrity and usefulness of their government. While every American citizen must contemplate with the utmost pride and enthusiasm the growth and expansion of our country; the sufficiency of our institutions to stand against the rudest shocks of violence; and while still we are basking near his vitals an unhealed disease that dooms him to sudden collapse. It cannot be doubted that our stupendous achievements as a people and our country's vast strength have given rise to heedlessness of those laws governing our national health, which we can no more evade than human life can escape the law of God and nature. "Manifestly nothing is more vital to our supremacy as a nation, and to the beneficent purposes of our government than a sound and stable currency. Its exposure to degradation should at once arouse to activity the most enlightened statesmanship; and the danger of a depreciation of the purchasing power of wages paid to toil, should furnish the strongest incentive to prompt and con-
