THE REPRODUCTION OF THE OLD DE WITT CLINTON DUE TO IT.

A Unique Bit of History Which Deal With the Old Anti-Masonry Feeling In New York State Over Sixty Years Ago. A Clever Artist With Scissors.

"The New York Central Railroad company's reproduction of the first railroad train and locomotive ever run in New York state, a most interesting and valuable exhibit at the Chicago fair," said an old resident of Albany, "causes me to wonder how many of the officers of that company know that if the disappearance of Morgan from Batavia 65 years ago bad not been attributed to murderous machinations of the Masonic fraternity, which resulted in the great anti-Masonic excitement that spread throughout the country and became a sensational political factor, they would not have been able to make the reproduction, and the appearance of that curious railroad train and engine would never have been known in accurate and pictorial representation.

"It was years before the discovery and practical introduction of that crude predecessor of photography, the daguerreotype, when the pioneer railroad train in this state was run, and as the future importance to history of the appearance of that train never occurred to those interested in bringing it into existence the skill of no artist with his pencil was brought into use to perpetuate it on paper. It happened that a young man named Brown-William H. Brown of Philadelphia—was in Albany on the day the train was run, Aug. 9, 1881, and had been in the place several days. "He had a marvelous talent for cutting with a pair of scissors out of black paper lifelike profile portraits and accurate representations of buildings, machinery and even landscapes.

"The remarkable part of this talent of his was his power to make a perfectly exact portrait of persons days and even weeks after having seen them but once, and that only casually on the street.

"He had for some time made a good living by the exercise of his peculiar art. Thaddeus Stevens was at that time just beginning to make a reputation in politics and had seized upon the anti-Masonic idea for use in Pennsylvania, as it had been so successfully worked by Thurlow Weed and his lieutenants in New York state. The feeling was growing in Pennsylvania, and young Brown thought it would be a good stroke of business for him to go to Albany, have a look at Thurlow Weed and others, snip their likeness out in silhouette, and besides getting a fee from them for the work duplicate the pictures for sale among the anti-Masonic enthusiasts in Pennsylvania and elsewhere.

"He went to Albany early in August, 1831, and did a great deal more than get the portraits of Thurlow Weed. His wonderful work took the town by storm, and he was kept busy from morning until night cutting the silhouette likenesses of people of all kinds, sexes and ages that flocked to his rooms.

"His greatest artistic feat was the cutting in one large picture of the famous Burgess corps entire, with staff and band in full parade, each member's portrait being of surprising accuracy. This picture is among the most precious relics in "And so it happened that this unique young artist was in Albany on the day the quaint locomotive De Witt Clinton, with its equally quaint coaches, was to be run on its first trip over the Mohawk and on railroad "He was one of the passengers on the train, and when it returned to Albany he cut with his scissors an exact picture of the locomotive and two of the coaches, making the portrait of David Matthew, the engineer, and John T. Clark, the con-ductor, on his seat on the outside of the front coach.

"In that picture appear the likenesses of Thurlow Weed, ex-Governor Yates and other distinguished Albanians of that day, but neither Mr. Weed nor the ex-governor was on the train. Without a thought of the future of that picture as a valuable contribution to history, the artist cut those portraits merely as an exercise of his skill in depicting a subject from memory. He told me so him-self 40 years afterward. "While Artist Brown was in Albany he concluded to go to Boston and Hart ford to make some portraits and other cuttings with his marvelous scissors. While in Hartford he showed the picture he had made of the railroad train and locomotive to a member of the Connecticut Historical society, who at once saw what a treasure it must necessarily become, and the artist presented it to the society, where it is today a relic beyond price.

"Some 30 years after cutting that picture Brown became interested in the railroad business himself, having long ceased to exercise his artistic skill professionally, and one day, having almost forgotten the Albany picture, he read in a newspaper an account of a litho-graph that had just been published from a photograph of the silhouette picture he had presented to the Connecticut Historical society.

"He sent to the publisher of the lithograph and procured a copy of it and was rejoiced to see an exact reproduction of his scissors cutting of more than 30 years before. But the joy he felt over a sight of the picture was scarcely as great as the inscription beneath it gave him. "The date of the running of the train was given as some time in 1882, the name of the locomotive being the John Bull instead of the De Witt Clinton and the name of the engineer John Hampson instead of David Matthew. "Brown at once set about the task of correcting the lithograph publishers his-tory, a task at which he worked for more than 30 years, for the lithograph copy of his picture, with its incorrect inscription, had been widely circulated."
