AMERICAN MEN ARE FLIRTS.

So Says a Foreigner Whose Society Ex-perience Has Been World-Wide. A foreigner who has had wide ex-perience of society in many countries and who has been observing Americans with great care in the course of a pleasant visit "on this side" has been confiding the results of his observations to the New York Tribune. One of the strongest convictions is that the young American is a "flirt." "In the United States," he said the other day, "flirting is quite as much of a masculine pastime as a feminine one, and in no country of the world that I have ever visited is there so much lovemaking without any ulterior object in view, either honorable or otherwise, carried on as in the United States. If there is any country in the world which can claim to be the home of consisted solely of a very ragged shirt platonic affection it is American. The one object in life of the American male flirt seems to be to avoid the matrimonial hook, and the ingenuity which he displays in skating on the in-side edge of a proposal without ever giving himself away is simply mar-velous. It is incredible that a man who can show such skill in this pas-time should be able to devote himself for months together to an apparently purposeless flirtation. Aimless these flirtations certainly are, all that the male flirt is anxious for being a little innocent love-making which will be without consequence either in the form of bans, breach of promise cases, or divorce suits, but which will afford him the opportunity of posing in the eyes of the public as irresistible where the fair sex is concerned. I do not believe that he admires any type of weman in particular, although he pro-fesses to do so, and I have noticed that he usually selects as the object of his temporary worship the lady who hap-pens to be most en evidence and the center of popular attraction in the locality which he honors with his pres-ence. This absence of eclecticism has its drawback, for it necessitates that he shall be armed at all points. He can no longer count on a bread andbuttery conversation and on a ready blush and smile, unless, indeed, he chooses to supply these two larger articles himself. Some of the male firt's time must be devoted to literature, for as often as not the lady around whom he flutters will chase him to his recollection of Ruskin and examine him in Tolstoi. I must confess that I have sometimes felt surprised at the attention which brilliant and experienced American women bestow upon the male flirt, whose artifices and superficiality cannot fail to be apparent to any woman possessed of knowledge of the world. Perhaps an explanation for this may be found in the fact that women of this kind use him much in the same way that a cat uses a choice piece of wood furniture-namely, to sharpen her claws against."

REASONING POWER OF BEES. In a Rainstorm They Select the Shelter of

Heavy Foliaged Trees. A few years ago the person who might give utterance to the idea that any but human beings possessed rea-soning powers would have been con-sidered guilty of rank heresy, says the Philadelphia Ledger. But with ad-vanced enlightenment there are thousands who have been driven to the be-lief that the "divine light" has not been bestowed upon man alone, but upon animals as well, even insects coming in for a share of that force which is a grade higher than instinct. Close obone thing." "But," cries his opponent, one thing." Served from 5 p. m. until 12, Admission 10 cents. reasoning faculty is especially notice-able among dogs, while many other animals evince a power of thought, of ability to reason, really remarkable. In a communication to the academy of natural sciences some time ago, Prof. Mehan related an incident that came under his own observation which, while not conclusive evidence of reasoning power in insects, yet is strongly indicative of it. During a light spring shower the professor took shelter under a large linden tree in full bloom. While there he noticed an unusual number of bees busily at work among the flowers of the linden, while a tree of another species, close at hand, also in bloom, had no bees about it. The reason was quickly apparent to him. The deserted tree was light of foliage and the rain poured through freely, while the linden had heavy foliage and in such abundance that the rain was shed almost as perfectly as from an umbrella. The bees were evidently aware of this, for they came and went directly to and from the linden, ignoring the other tree entirely. He assumed, and seemingly correctly, that this could not be purely instinct, but was the result of reasoning, of a low order perhaps, but still a line above an "inward impulse, unconscious and involuntary, which guides to the performance of an action without thought of improvement in the method." A FRENCH HERCULES.

UNDIVIDED BLESSINGS. The Well-Dressed Youth and the Ragged,

Wistful-Eyed Newsboy. A lady accompanied by her son, a lad of about twelve years, was riding in a street car up town the other day. The young gentleman had on what was evidently his first suit of "grownup" clothes. His shirt, collar, tie and scarf-pin were immaculate. His derby hat was spick and span. His suit was evidently made by a good tailor, and his faultless kid gloves were of the latest shade. He was well pleased with himself, and his mamma was well pleased with him, says the New York Times. At Fortysecond street a newsboy came on the cars crying his evening papers. He was rather more wretched looking consisted solely of a very ragged shirt and an equally ragged pair of trousers which were held on by a strip of dirty cotton cloth which served for a suspender. He was hatless and shoeless The most remarkable thing about this newsboy was that his face and hands were clean. The boy in the good clothes bought a paper. He immedi-ately began to read it as the men do, while he absently held out his gloved hand for the change. While the newsboy counted the pennies into the palm of the new kid glove he looked his customer over, not contemptuously, as one might imagine, but rather wistfully. Then he walked slowly out of the car looking back over his shoulder at the well-dressed boy. A change of horses was being made, and the newsboy stopped outside of the window with his papers under his arm and his hands in his pockets, still looking at the boy in the derby hat. The wistful expression deepened and grew. One could read upon his face what he was thinking, and a gentleman who had watched the little incident said with a sigh as the car started on: "Things don't seem to be very well evened up in this world," and everybody seemed to understand except the boy who was still looking at his paper, and his mother, who was fondly gazing at him. TALK OF PARIS ART STUDENTS.

They Wrangle All Night and Are Belue tant to Quit in the Morning.

From ten at night till two in the morning the brasseries of the Butte are in session. Ah! the interminable books and the reek of the cigars, until at last a hesitating exodus begins. An exhausted proprietor at the head of his waiters, crazed with sleepiness, eventually succeeds in driving these noctambulistic apostles into the street. Then the nervous lingering at the corner! The disputants, anxious and yet loath to part, say good-by, each re-gretting that he had not urged some fresh argument-an argument which had just occurred to him, and which he feels sure would have reduced his opponent to impotent silence. Sometimes, writes George Moore in Modern Painting, the partings are stormy. The question of the introduction of the complementary colors into the frames of the pictures is always a matter of strife. Several are strongly in favor of carrying the complementary colors into the picture frames. "If you admit," says one, "that to paint a blue roof with an orange sky shining on it you must introduce the complementary color green-which the spectator does not see but imagines-there is excellent reason why you should dot the frame servers are continually making public one thing." But," cries his opponent, "there is finality in all things. If you arry your principle to the bitter end the walls as well as the frames should be dotted with complementary colors the staircases, too, the streets; and if we pursue the complementaries into

to stop?"

The Wonderful Intelligence Displayed by the Feathered Mite. I believe that animals reason and are not guided by blind instinct alone, says a writer in Donahoe's Magazine. I have observed many instances that have led me to this conclusion, having always studied the ways of birds and beasts with loving patience. For that impudent little lump of brown imperti-nence, the English sparrow, I have no affection, for, besides disturbing my rest, he has driven away from the haunts of men many of my sweet-voiced feathered friends, who were also favored with beautiful plumage. New York city, there stands—or sits—a statue of the late Dr. Greeley. Over against the doctor, as it were, and well into the street, Benjamin Franklin, of

In front of the Tribune building in revered memory, mounted in bronze upon a pedestal where he can get a good view of the farmer journalist, who is also in bronze. Around the statue of Franklin is a car track, and this point encircling Poor Richard is known to the drivers and conductors

as "Cape Horn."

Standing not long ago at a point near "Cape Horn," I observed a sparrow struggling with a piece of bread about as large as himself. He tried to fly away with it, but it was apparently much too heavy. Then he changed his tactics and pushed and pulled until the bread lay directly upon the car track. He was none too soon, for a car roundd the "Horn" just at that moment, and the sparrow, with a sharp chirp, flew up and rested upon the bald head of venerable Dr. Franklin. The wheels of the car crushed the hard lump of bread into a thousand crumbs, whereupon the little bird descended and settled down to a feast.

No Inferior Seat for Her. The wit and humor of the Irish Jarvey are proverbial. He never fails to make a joke or create a ludicrous situ-ation, especially when he is dealing with "them English furners." A wellknown countess happened to be on a visit to Dublin. She mounted a side car and sat somewhat uncomfortable, as all English people do on the Irish vehicle. Suddenly the unoccupied driver's seat attracted her attention, and she inquired about it. "Oh, me lady," said the Jarvey, "all the foinc titled people do sit up there and be payin' a double fare." The countess, of course, would no longer occupy an inferior seat, and took her place beside the driver.

A contemporary reports an exchange of civilities between two artists. "Well, old man," says one, "how's business?"

"Splendid!" says number two. "Tve just got a commission from a million-aire. He wants his children painted "Good! I congratulate you, my boy.
