ZEBRAS IN HARNESS.

Experiments in Domesticating the Queer Little Animals.

They Are Thought to Be Better Than Mules for Certain Purposes in Africa—Correction of a Mistaken Notion.

The prevalent notion about the zebra is that it is so untamable as to be of no practical use to man. Experiments show that this is an erroneous notion. In a number of instances it has been reduced to docility in Europe, but no attempt has been made to impress it into the serviceable bondage with which we are familiar in the horse. That complete tractability for the purpose of labor is not impossible, and is, indeed, hopeful, is being shown in the Transvaal, where a firm engaged in the coaching business between Pretoria and Fort Tuli, in Mashonaland, have actually eight zebras in harness and four of them regularly employed in drawing a coach. These animals were capturned by the lasso, and in a few months four had been so trained that they were perfectly quiet and willing in harness, while the others are becoming habituated to restraint and will in time be fully under control. H. Stephens, who gives an account of the experiment in the Field, says Messrs. Seedesberg are thus far satisfied and will endeavor to substitute zebras for mules in dragging their coaches. These very graceful striped quadrupeds are no doubt fleeter of foot than the mule and perhaps as swift as the horse, but there is an important superiority over both that they possess. They enjoy absolute immunity from that very fatal ailment of South Africa vaguely called horse sickness, which in a single night in low country kills a horse or mule turned out on the veldt. The loss from this cause is a heavy item in the expenses of a South African livery stable. It is found that the zebra does not kick and is gently amenable to the rein by having a soft mouth. A tendency to bite is the one vice they have, but this they cease to practice when not afraid of being hurt.

It is the intention of the firm to attempt cross-breeding with horses. The result will be awaited with considerable interest. A new hybrid of hopeful stamina and qualities for harness or the saddle may confidently be expected, and perhaps the somber uncouthness of the cross between the horse and ass will be overcome and replaced by graces of form and charms of color. It seems strange that it should be left until to-day to essay the domestication of the zebra. The horse and ass have so long been pressed into service that the original habitat of both is disputed. They either come from Asia or Africa. But the fossil horse is also found in America, and some of the types go so far back in geological time as to suggest that the horse had its origin on the American continent. But when Columbus landed the horse was unknown and all the troops of wild coursers have descended from domesticated breeds which have escaped from control. South Africa produces not only the zebra, but the quagga and the dauw, congeners which might also prove of use in crossing. Both have been domesticated, but the experiment has not been carried to practical utility. The opportunity to introduce the quagga as a hybrid or pure bred has almost been lost, as the animal is either extinct or very scarce. The dauw is adapted to life on the plains and still roams in great herds north of the Orange river.

A STAMP ROOM.

The Novel Wall Covering of a London Apartment.

In a certain old-fashioned house in London there is a room about twelve feet square, the walls of which are completely papered with postage stamps. It is estimated by Mr. Palmer, who is the largest stamp dealer in the world, that these stamps would be worth five million dollars but for the unfortunate circumstance that they are not genuine.

Mr. Palmer extracted these forgeries from collections which he has bought from time to time. As a rule he says the people from whom he bought them did not know they were forgeries. No forged stamp, however, is likely to pass as genuine when it falls under his scrutiny.

This crazy patchwork shows a specimen of every known stamp in the world. The Pall Mall Budget says there are seventy thousand stamps on the walls of the room, and that it took almost thirty years to collect them.

"To make wall paper out of them kept four pairs of hands busy for three months. They are pasted upon canvas, so that it will not be necessary to remove the building in order to remove the stamps. Paste, not gum, was used, because gum discolors stamps. Having been fastenen to the canvas, the stamps were treated to a coat of shellac and then varnished."

While there cannot be much artistic beauty in a room papered in this way, it suggests an idea for those discouraged stamp collectors who started with the intention of securing a million, but have at last abandoned the idea after patiently "soaking off" and tying up several thousands of the small bits of paper, gathered by their own industry and through the contributions of pitying friends.

DEALING IN FUTURES.

The Fee Has Something to Do with the Degree of Good Fortune.

The gypsy element of the population that camps on the outskirts of summer settlements for the ostensible purpose of disposing of sweet-grass baskets deals also, says the New York World, in futures of various shades of gold, according to the amount of silver which crosses the palm. There was a weird-looking old creature selling her two sorts of wares to a piazza full of young women the other morning, who revealed some of the secrets of the profession. She had taken a fifty-cent fee for the reading of one fair palm. Suddenly she interrupted herself to remark:

"There, there! A wonderful fortune! Give me seventy-five cents more and I'll read you the most wonderful thing."

"No," said the girl, laughing; "no more. Give me my fifty cents' worth of wonder and that'll do."

Entreaties on the gypsy's part were in vain. The strong-minded young woman would pay no more than fifty cents for any destiny whatever. So the prophetess read on. When she had finished she remarked, with a sigh:

"And to think that for a little more I could have given you a light-complected young man as well as a dark, and a wedding in five months instead of a year!"

JUST THE POOR MAN'S LUCK.

Usually the Person Who Can't Afford It Needs Artificial Limbs.

"There are perhaps eight hundred thousand men in this country who need artificial legs or arms, and not more than one hundred thousand of these are supplied." It was a well known maker of wooden legs who said this to a New York Sun man. He was warding off an appeal to his charity in behalf of a locomotive fireman who had slipped under his engine and been badly crippled. "The fact is," he continued, "it is always the poor man who loses a leg or an arm, now that the war is over. Excepting the crippled veterans who are kept supplied with legs by the government, nearly every man who loses a limb has to have help to get a new one."

But while the number of pensioners on account of the war continues to increase with each increase in years since that time of carnage, there is little likelihood that the number of makers of artificial legs will fall off much in number. There are nearly two hundred of them now, large and small, many of whom, having worked in one of the larger factories, set up for themselves and whittle out "timber toes" for unfortunates who cannot afford to buy one of the improved legs.

The science of making wooden legs and arms has in recent years almost supplied the place of the natural members that have been lost. There is almost no occupation now that is closed to a man on account of his crippled condition, and by the use of a rubber heel and toe it is made possible for a man to walk almost without perceptible impediment or limp in his gait. In fact, a man with both legs gone can now preserve his equilibrium and walk about almost as well as any other man.

The wood employed—wood being lighter and stronger for this purpose than any other material discovered—is willow or bass wood, and after it has been seasoned and carved into the proper form it is covered with rawhide and enamel to strengthen and finish it.

With artificial arms and hands a man may hold a fork, drive a horse, extend the arm at will and even write a fair hand. There is a case of a man who lost both hands and one foot, who now walks perfectly well and is able with his artificial hands to grasp light articles, open doors and feed himself.

A man with two artificial legs rides horseback and can mount and dismount readily, and another man has even walked a mile in sixteen minutes and fifty seconds, to beat the wooden-leg record. Skating and bicycle riding are other accomplishments and enjoyments from which some men with artificial limbs are not debarred. It is is curious to note that, according to the tables of percentages, farmers are the greatest sufferers, 17 per cent. of the cases of leg amputations being found in their number, while workers at the bench number 13 per cent., laborers 8 1-2 per cent. and railroad men but 7 per cent.

GREATEST MENACE TO FORESTS.

Making of Paper from Wood Causes Wholesale Destruction of Trees.

The extensive use of wood in making the cheapest grades of paper offers one of the serious obstacles to forest preservation, says the Philadelphia Telegraph. In the last two or three years the growth of the wood-pulp industry has been enormous, a dozen great mills, each manufacturing from fifty to three hundred tons of pulp a day, have been built on the Hudson river, to feed principally on the Adirondack forests. The wood chiefly used is spruce, and the especially disastrous effect, of the industry on the forests results not only from the extreme demand for the lumber, but from the fact that while the demand is especially for trees of thirty to thirty-five years growth, the young trees are also cut. In 1881 the capacity of the pulp mills of the United States was about seventy-two thousand tons per annum. The present capacity is seven hundred thousand tons.

And in this remarkable growth the industry has been accompanied by these three desirable things: Increase in quantity, decrease in price, and no diminution in the compensation of labor. The sound of the ax, the barker and the grinder is heard in twenty-two states. The neighborhood of Niagara and the Adirondacks in New York, the territories of the Kennebec, Androscoggin and Penobscot rivers in Maine, the Fox river valley of Wisconsin, the hills of New Hampshire and Vermont and the natural gas belt of Indiana are the greatest pulp-producing regions of the United States. About thirty-five hundred cords of wood are required daily to supply the demand of the mills.

A New Explosive.

Chemists and others interested in the discovery and use of new explosives are now busy studying the component parts and character of an acid recently discovered by a chemist, and to which he has given the name of hydrazoic acid. This, it is claimed, is destined to make a new era in the history of explosives. The new acid has been christened hydrazoic acid from its composition, which is three parts of nitrogen and one part of hydrogen. It seems strange that in all the years that chemistry has been studied this acid has escaped discovery till now. It is described as resembling water, fuming strongly in contact with the air and causing painful wounds when applied to the skin. The acid does not seem to be itself explosive, but the salts it forms with most of the metals are described as being extremely so. It was discovered accidentally, it seems, during the course of an obscure organic investigation, and the strangeness of its properties led to an investigation, and the discovery of the exact nature of its characteristics. Few specimens exist in this country, and the acid has not been studied to any great extent.

Where Our Perfumes Come From.

Most of our perfumes come from flowers or are made in imitation of the scents of flowers, so attar of roses, by a common consent ranks at the head of the list of perfumes. Other preparations from roses, too, hold a high place and have long been esteemed. Rosewater is historic. When Saladin entered Jerusalem in the twelfth century, he had the walls of the Mosque of Omar washed with it. But attar or oil of roses is by far the most precious and most prized of all. An eastern prince will present to an honored guest rich jewels, rubies and diamonds, and then add as the rarest of all a crystal bottle filled with this priceless essence.
