> THE ISSUES OF THE DAY DIS-CUSSED BY OUR CON GRESSMAN

Mr. Pearson Brings Up the Ancient Alliance Demands Matter Grievance-Mr. Crawford Meet Him at Every Polat The Duke d'Hat, otherwise known as

Richmond, after months of preparation and study such as he probably never made before, met the Democratic standardcearer, Wm. T. Crawford, on the stump for the first time last evening. The meeting was in the Grand opera house, which held one of the largest political gatherings ever known in Asheville. Every seat downstairs was occupied and many were standing, while the galleries were comfortably crowded. For the most part it was a very orderly crowd, alhough some persons in the upper part of funeral tonight he house persisted in taking Crawford's ime to yell for l'earson.

The Duke started out to obey Jim Moody's injunction to "Give Democracy was there at my post to represent volla-fore he left the boilding he evidently had been impressed with the fact that he had not done so well as he had hoped. Pearson did not impress one as a good stump speaker. He could not remain stump speaker. He could not remain quiet under Crawtord's pointed remarks, but interjected sentences in a high, strained voice that was theatr'e or child sh. as the listener chose to regard it.

The Duke Opeus. President Luther of the Democratic club called the meeting to order and introduced Mr. Pearson as the club's guest for the evening. The Duke was given a hearty cheer by his adherents as he came down the stage. He dived into his work at once, after saying there had been a change in the program. He had first expected the meeting would be held in the court house and that Mr. Crawford would speak He was the guest of the club and would endeavor to behave according to the rules of hospitality. Said he: "Mr. Crawford will undertake to tell you that I have no politics, and I will undertake to prove that his poli-tics are worse than none at all. A few words about myself. I will use

A few words about myself. I will use plain language and talk strictly business. When I was in politics in 1886 I was elected by the largest majority ever given in the county. I was disgusted and disappointed with the course of the Demoeratic party; I came home and went out of politics, and I would be out tonight if that party had performed its promises—

(it had not laid its hand upon me, meerace, and would not take any more that party had performed its promises-if it had not laid its hand upon me, apon my neighbor and upon every man in America. I see before me men who owe me money, and men to whom I owe ioncy. You cannot pay me and I cannot pay you without great sacrifices. When Mr. Crawford arose for his reply there was an outburst of applause that The Sycamore of the Crab- left no doubt as to the feelings of the large majority of the crowd. There was a waving of hats and handkerchiefs and cheering that filled the house again and again and kept up till it looked as if the speaker would not be given a say for some minutes. When quiet was restored the Congressman began:

"Fellow citizens: Four years ago and the nominee of the Democratic party. That was, my friends, an honor and a pleasure to me never to be forgotten. Four years after that time, tonight, I people who know best are saying "imstand here again, your nomince, to represtand here again, your nomince, to represent you again in the 54th Congress. My friends, I thank you sincercly for the confidence you expressed in me when you again gave me the Democratic banner to bear once again. I was not here among you working for that high honor, but I was at my post in Washington, trying to do my duty for my people as best I knew how. I never gave any attention to the matter; it was your business to select a candidate to succeed me in the 54th Congress; but because of your confidence in me, I am proud to be your standard bearer again, and I shall hold it in my hands and it shall not trail in the dust.

"improvement has come." The gain is not yet what has been expected, and business, if good in comparison with years preceding.

Presumably there has not yet been time to feel the effects of the change, and a gradual gain will be more healthy and encouraging than a spasmodic rise, but the expansion of commercial loans has suddenly ceased, prices of manufactured products show weakness rather than strength, and there has been a reaction in the stock market. August has ended, but the interior demand for money still merely balances the receipts of superfluous cur

I am glad, however, to be here with such a respectable audience, to witness this interesting scene; such a splendid audience as pall-bearers at my funeral tonight?

"Now, my friends, I am not prepared to go into a detailed discussion of what the 53rd Congress has done up to this time. But it is enough to say that I was there at my post to represent you. district, gained a splendid victory over him. Not because of any personal attractions on my part, not because people love me so much—I was never so egotistic as to think that I could met Mr. Ewart in personal attractions—but I believe it was due to the force of Deno. I believe it was due to the force of Dem-ocratic principles, and the people showed that they loved party more than they did any man. In 1892 Jeter C. Pritchard, a noble champion of Republicanism. a man who stood with such Republican lights as James G. Blaine and John Sher man and the other great leaders of the a Republican party, was pressed into the fight for Republican principles by his party but when I presented the princip ples of the Democratic party to the peo-ple, again it was that the Republicans ple, again it was that the Republicans went down in the dust into defeat and ruin. A splendid victory was ours.

"And now, 1894, what do we see? They counsel among themselves, and determine that they will not fight this battle for their own principles: they decide that they can do nothing in this fight by themselves. They say, We cannot but hoisted the name of Richmond Pearson. Why was it that they were in such a great hurry about it, that they should hasten to have this meeting in March? Why was it that that conference authorized the secretary of the Republican Executive committee to call that convention with Mr. Crawford: "If you have any charges to prefer, in any view of the case, make your charge."

"I charge you with signing the subtreasury demand, and ask you if this [pointing to a card in his hand] is your signature. Again, I charge that he denied signing the card. Again, I ask him whether he regards John P. Kerr as a man of truth. I take the responsibility of saying that John P. Kerr is a man of truth, and he charges Mr. Crawford with signing it. The report of the committee on plan and scope was read by W. S. White of Virginia. It provided for a permanent bureau in Washington for the exhibition of the resources of the Southern states and for the general information of capi-tal and labor, the expenses of the bureau to be paid by provinta contributions from the states; also a sub bureau in each state through which exhibits should be forwarded to Washington, to be in charge of the commissioner of agricult ure labor or immigration who should verify all information filed with th oureau. A small commission would I allowed on sales made through the from each state and from the District of Columbia was provided for to be ap pointed by the chair, and a meeting is t be held in Washington to which th governor of each state would appoint ten delegates and to which the governors would be invited, to perfect details o organization.

Another resolution endorsed the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator Walsh for a permanent exhibit in Wash-ington of the resources of all the states A warm discussion was precipitated. Charles Catlett of Virginia declared that the Southern States had taken little advantage of the great opportunity afforded by the World's fair. R. F. Clayton of Florida held that the plan to treat before the great vanguard of De-moeracy, and would not take any more chances, but would surrender the field ter to the organization.
