succeeded, too, in his attempt, having recently established the fact that the extraordinary explosive, which he produced in the form of a fine powder, contains hydrogen as well as indide and nitrogen. This fact had been susperted, but never proved.

To the general reader it might seem hardly worth while to risk one's life in arder to find out a thing like that, but to the man of salence, devoting all his energies to investigations that the busy world never dreams of notleing, the discovery of such a fact is as thrilling as the finding of a gold nugget would be to a half-starved miner.

And his reward is greater than that of the fortunate gold sceker, for his name goes upon the honor roll of science, to be read, perhaps, hundreds of years in the future.
