

GLEANED FROM FALLOW FIELDS OF FUN IN THE OLD NORTH STATE

Bird Mocked the Roosters.

While plodding over the steps one day this week the Standard reporter heard a mocking bird on momentary strain. This particular bird occupies a cage which hangs in front of a store, a deft little conductor is a colored citizen, and although he might very plausibly surround him, is unusually apparent, cheerful, in spite of the fact that he is in captivity. On this particular occasion the bird was sitting on the perch watching two roosters which had just ceased fighting and were flitting around stricken by crowing. The bird seemed to take in the situation and, apparently desiring to tantalize the roosters, he began mocking a rooster, crowing and "making noise" like a little bantam rooster almost to perfection. The crowing was such a good imitation of a bantam rooster that it attracted the attention of the roosters in the street and the writer was also badly fooled for an instant, expecting to see a little bantam march from the store to take a hand in the trouble between the roosters in the street.—Stateville Landmark.

Sweet Summer Time.

Summer time has come! Summer has come! We knew it was coming! There was every indication that it would be here this year. The birds have sung it in the boughs, the frogs have croaked it in the ponds, the flowers have vied with each other in blooming, the weather prophets have predicted its coming, and all things are made glad by its arrival. We have been eating strawberries with their straw, snap beans are snapping for us. Blackberries will soon be darkening the horizon. The new potatoes are eyeing us. Peas are appearing our appetites. Beets are getting ready to beat us. We are eating gooseberries with their feathers picked off. It is currently reported that currants are ripe. The girls and boys are returning home from schools and colleges, and the sweet girl graduate and the boy orator are very much in evidence.—Durham Sun.

Reg Full of Honey.

A Stokes county man while searching for honey found a keg full, according to a story in the Winston Journal. The story says that he was searching among a lot of old kegs and barrels which had been left by a blockade distiller when he came upon one keg literally full of honey and bees. If this had happened in the olden days it would be easy to believe that the man was searching for honey, but who would ever think of looking for honey in a keg? There might have been some "dreenins" in some of those barrels.

Keeps Us Guessing.

"The like of marriages in these parts was never known. At the present rate we shall one day exhaust the supply," says The Greensboro Record. Supply of what?

Great Snakes!

The Stateville Mascot is becoming a nature faker. In a recent issue it tells a story about a snake with a mouth no bigger than a pea, swallowing half a dozen hen eggs and then wrapping itself around a tree so tightly that the eggs all broke with a loud pop, pop, pop. When this story was shown to The Citizen snake expert he pronounced it a fake pure and simple. "Snakes don't break eggs that way at all," he declared. "Only a few weeks ago while I was out big ivy way fishing, I saw a practical demonstration of a snake's ingenuity in getting at the inside of an egg that was already inside of him. And I know, for I killed the snake and investigated. My attention was attracted to a big black crawling up a tree, just as this story says, but he didn't squeeze himself around the tree to break the eggs. No sirree. He goes up about ten feet from the ground, crawls out on a limb, and the lets go, falling plump upon a rock. And that's the way they get the eggs broken."

Another Snake Tale.

The Cleveland Star also comes forward with a snake story, trying to steal the honors of being the star nature faker which so justly belongs to The Mascot. It takes up the old horse snake controversy again to establish the hoofs again in the favor of naturalists. A wonderful snake has horns on its head, and kicks something like a mule when attacked. The Star says this is no myth for it saw the snake itself. The rest of the news paper fraternity are now urging the editor to change his brand quickly.

TO PUT AN END TO NEGRO PYTHIANISM

COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO TAKE STEPS TO THAT END.

Will Probably Bring Suit in Court to Restrict Negro Lodges From Using Insigma.

A resolution was passed at the Grand Lodge meeting of the Knights of Pythias of the state on June 12, which was fully discussed on the floor and carried unanimous in the several branches of the meeting was the adoption of a resolution against the use of the name and emblems of the order by negroes. A committee composed of W. W. Hall of Murphy, J. C. Bedford of Roanoke, and P. S. Carlisle of Salisbury was appointed to take up the matter and while no instructions were given this committee, it is understood that legal proceedings will be instituted soon to restrain negro lodges from claiming affiliation with the order or using its name and emblems. When the resolution was referred on the floor there was no discussion of it, but all the members understood just what it meant.

May Go To Courts.

The grand council of the state can take action in either the federal or state courts, or may go to the legislature and ask that the charter of the negro lodges be annulled on the ground that it has no affiliation or connection with real Pythian lodges. There are not many negro lodges in the state, and it is thought that they will make a very stubborn fight.

In these roasting hot days, while the skeeter stings, the bulldog singeth and the gnats bite, the poor fisherman sits on the creek bank and catches naught. They do say it's fun—for the frog and the skeeter.

Get a reed pole and a line and a hook, and a few worms, and go out and try it. Whether the fish bite or not, who cares, it's fishin'. It is a time to see visions and dream dreams and such times are few enough in those hurly burly days, goodness knows.

NATIONAL GUARD TO HAVE ENCAMPMENT

ADVISORY BOARD DECIDES UPON JULY AS THE TIME.

Second Will Go First Followed By Third and Then First Regiments.

SPRING.
When the bees are in the clover,
And the rattle's in the rocks,
It is considered very dangerous
To ramble without socks.

For the rattle's bite is poison,
And the bee conceals a sting,
And it's just such small matters
That distract somewhat from Spring.

When the first wild flowers lift up their face.

To the sun and the wind so brisk,
Sally May would love to gather
them;

But it's taking too much risk.

For a bumble bee or rover,

Or a rattle in the mesh,

Would want no wilder joy.

Than to bite her lily bush.

It's a Pellegra.
Many people haven't known what it was that ailed them. The tired feeling that comes and abides in one's bones has puzzled them for years, and they have taken everything to except work, but now comes forward
a scientist who says it's pellegra,
and that it is caused by eating too much corn pone. A down state editor having in mind the enormous consumption of pone among his subscribers gets worried over this and says:

In the meantime, we advise all our meat-eating subscribers, who are in a fever to come forward and set the record straight, and those who are not subscribers, and who have been eating the poisonous corn meal for the past hundred years, if any are living, to stop right now.

INTERESTING LONG DISTANCE RACES

(By Associated Press)

CLEVELAND, OHIO, June 13.—Although probably uncharmed prices for the two races of the long distance Auto race of June 13 and 14 will not be possible until the race is much explored, work was completed on the motor roads for the Cross Point, Ind., race today. The roadbed was tested and experimental burns were made to determine just how fast cars may safely take the curves. Official practice over the course will begin tomorrow between the hours of four and six a.m. and 7 and 8 p.m. on the twenty-four miles of macadam will be kept clear of everything save the eighteen cars entered in the light car contests on June 13 for the Indiana trials, and the twelve entered in the sedan race for big cars on June 14.

After making the way it would keep in this climate one would be willing to have that one tenth of 1 percent in the bunk that the auto leaves.

Nobody hates an end seat hog so much, however, is another end seat hog who doesn't get there in time to get it himself.

Y.M.I. DEBT PARTLY PAID AND REFUNDED

LAUDABLE ENTERPRISE SHOWN BY COLORED PEOPLE

Raise Nearly $2,000 for Their Building Mainly Among Themselves.

(Contributed)

Judging by the large number present, as the interest shown and by the loud applause that rang out over the assembly hall of the Y. M. C. A. yesterday afternoon, when the total amount raised in a recent canvass for the building fund was announced, many a heart was made exceedingly glad. The amount raised was $1,711.

Through the kindness of a friend of the work, enough was borrowed to pay in full the modest of the $6,000 mortgage. The president, Rev. C. B. Dunsmuir expressed the sentiment of the entire membership when he thanked all who had contributed in any way to make the effort a success. This is regarded a most excellent showing under the present financial conditions. Another splendid sum was shown in this canvass, there were more individual contributions than ever before, something in the neighborhood of five hundred persons.

In commenting upon interest shown by the white people, he said that they helped because they saw that the colored people were putting up a fight in their own behalf. He also spoke of what it meant to the colored people themselves to assume large responsibilities and handle them with credit. The financial committee deserves much credit for the businesslike way the whole affair was conducted. Of the amount collected the Girls Industrial Club and the Ladies Auxiliary reported one hundred dollars each, of the soldiers, Alonso McCoy reported $1,00, and George Greenlee over $200, and a young woman a hundred. Several others with good deserve unstinted praise of all. And after all had it not been for the friendly assistance of the press this amount of money could not have been raised in so short a time.

SWAPPED HORSES WITH LADY AGAINST HER WILL

Licked Her Husband and Drove Him to Woods and Then Took off His Nag.

(Special to The Citizen.)

NEW HOPE, N. C., June 13.—One evening recently Bob Follett and John Parker from South Irrell, while on their way to Wilkesboro horse trading, met a man by the name of Smith, and a lady from Stateville, near here with a hilly horse, and Smith wanted Follett and Parker to help him up the hill, and he would give them all the old boozes they could drink. Follett and Parker agreed to help him up the hill at once. The effect was soon felt and heard over the neighborhood. Follett and Parker got into a fight with Smith and soon got the best of him. Smith took to the woods and left. Follett and Parker with the lady and the horse. When the excitement was over he returned and found that they had swapped an old mare for Smith's horse and started the lady on her way to town about 10 o'clock Saturday night. Follett and Parker remained until Sunday morning, when they took their departure for Wilkesboro but did not get very far until they returned with the horse they got from the lady and left it with Mr. Charles Tucker until they returned from Wilkesboro with the understanding that Smith called for the horse back.

The adjutant general said that the Second regiment will be the first to encamp for seven years this to be early in July, followed by the encampment of the Third and the First.
