After much diligent inquiry I have learned that of the one hundred and seventy men who composed that general assembly only three are now living, the others have all passed over the mystic river and gone to that for off has been fraught with delight for country, "from whose bourne no Asheville theatre-goers, being made traveller ever returns."

a long time, but there are graven upon the tablets of my memory, vividly before me today, as to seem is was only yesterday I was looking upon them. While I look in rain today around this hall for a living face that greeted me in those days, I can at this hour, call to mind a vision of that grand galaxy of statesmen, whose voices, though hushed, are still speaking to me, and whose spirits seem to be near me; and I look again Guilford, and the dark flashing eyes of the flery and imperious Matt. W. Ransom of Northampton, the classic features of the urbane and scholarly William N. H. Smith of Hertford, the proud, imperious and eloquent John Kerr of Caswell, the stern and sedate David Outlaw of Bertle, the cultured and courteous William T. Dortch of Wayne, the brainy semper paratus of the house, Atlan J. Dargan of Anson, the handsome, gifted and brilliant Ed. Graham Haywood of Wake, the warm hearted; and sweet spirited Oliver H. Dockery of Richmond, the talwart and comamnding figure of lobert R. Bridgers of Edgecombe, end Nathan N. Flemming of Rowan, the genial and sunny face of Dick l'eeves of Surry, the noble, courtly and big souled Thomas Settle of Rockingham (speaker of the house). These rad hundred others, with whom my spirit loves to commune, seem to be ground me foday, and, as in the past, in the future, they shall ever dwell with me as a cherished and blessed memory. And so I shall be think-
