MEMORIAL ALTARS,

Where shall their dust be laid?-On the mountain's starry crest, Whose kindling lights are signals made

To the mansions of the blest: No,-no,-no! For bright though the mountain be, It has no gem in its diadem Like the life-spark of the free!

Where shall their dust be laid?-On the ocean's stormy shore, With wailing woods, at their backs ar rayed, And shouting seas before: No,-no,-no! For, deep as its waters be, They have no depth like the faith which fired

The martyrs of the free! Where shall their dust be laid?-By the valley's greenest spot, As it ripples down, in leaps and shade, To the blue forget-me-not:

No,-no,-no! For, green as the valley be, It has no flower like the bleeding-Heart

Of the heroes of the free!-Or where muffled pageants march, Through the spired and chimins pale. To the chancel-rail of its oriel arch, Up the organ-flooded aisle: No,-no,-no!

For, grand as the minsters be. They could never hold all the knightly hosts Of JACKSON and LEE!

Where shall their dust b. had?-In the urn of the Human Heart, Where its purest dreams are first displayed And its passionate longings start:

Yes,-yes,-yes! By Memory's pictured wave, Is a living shrine for the dead we love In the land they died to save!
