

GERMAN AIRPLANES MAKE ANOTHER DAYLIGHT RAID ON ENGLAND

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE) firing, followed by fighting planes. Soon the signal that the raiders had been driven off was given. A correspondent of the News of the World wires that seven German Taubes crossed the Essex coast, flying from the west, at 8:45 o'clock this morning.

Some excitement was caused in London by the sounding of the raid warnings, of which the first notice was given in this morning's newspapers. At 8:30 o'clock "sound bombs" were sent up from every fire station in the county, transforming the usual Sunday morning quiet into a din which London now associates with an air raid.

Persons who believed anti-aircraft guns were in action made a rush for cover. The tube stations were favorite places of refuge, and some persons whose breakfast had been disturbed brought pots of coffee with them and finished their meal on platforms.

The total casualties in the air raid, according to an official statement issued this evening, number eleven killed and twenty-six injured. The damage to property is insignificant.

"A patrol of the royal flying corps," says the statement, "encountered some hostile machines returning to Belgium and brought down one at sea near the coast."

A correspondent in Essex of the Exchange Telegraph company reports that he witnessed an aerial battle that lasted about an hour. A squadron of seven German aircraft, traveling in a westerly direction, encountered a number of British planes, which compelled them to turn northward. They went in this direction about half a mile and then swerved to the east.

One German machine was cut off from the main body and surrounded by three British airplanes, which drove it in the opposite direction until all four were lost in the haze. The pursuit of the others continued, all the machines climbing to a greater height as they fought. They attained an altitude of 15,000 to 18,000 feet, and were soon lost to sight.

PARTIAL SOLUTION OF MINISTERIAL CRISIS Statement Announces Several Changes in the New Cabinet of Russia.

PETROGRAD, July 22.—An authorized statement announces that a partial solution of the ministerial crisis was reached at a ministerial council held Sunday morning and confirms that the principal reason of Prince Lvoff's resignation from the premiership, was the agrarian policy, on which an irreconcilable difference arose between the premier and the socialist minister, especially the minister of agriculture. The statement adds: "It was established that the divergence of opinion as to the advisability of issuing a proclamation declaring Russia a republic arose principally from the fact that certain members of the cabinet believed it necessary to publish immediately an edict proclaiming a republic, which while the declaration now being drawn up on the subject represents a parliamentary measure with a view to promulgation by a constituent assembly, did not establish a republic and in no way infringes on the prerogatives of that assembly."
