CAPITOLA'S DAM IS NOW COMPLETE

MAKES 2,000 HORSEPOWER AVAILABLE AT MARSHALL.

Madison County Industries Are Making Red Cross Supply Materials and yarn specialties.

The recent completion of the big dam of the Capitola Manufacturing company across the French Broad river at Marshall, and the bridge which connects this plant and that of the Marshall Milling company with the town, marks the end of the extensive damage done there by the flood of July of last year.

For a large part of a year these concerns labored under the severe handicap of having to ferry cotton and supplies across the river, and then ferry the manufactured product to the railway. Replacement of the old log dam by one of enduring types ensures permanent and economical power, and the bridge obviates the costly handling of material and output.

The dam, a massive concrete structure 500 feet in length, foundationed on the solid rock of the river bed and amply equipped with flood gates, was constructed by the Berry-Fortune Construction company according to the designs of Chas. E. Waddell. The engineer's estimate is that it makes potentially available 2,000 horsepower, and this fact suggests that this cheap and effective power will in the future bring a still greater industrial development to Marshall. The dam now furnishes 100 horsepower to the two mills by direct water action through the medium of turbines. The cost of the dam was about $35,000.

The Capitola mill is now engaged in producing what may be termed yarn specialties. Its yarn is used largely in making Red Cross hospital supplies. Special characteristics make this yarn in demand for lining rubber boots, in the making of fleece-lined underwear, for insulating electric wires, splicing the heels and toes of socks. Some of the yarn has gone far abroad, exports since the beginning of the war including shipments to China, Brazil, Argentine Republic, Colombia and Chile.

The Marshall Milling company, which is under the same control as the manufacturing company, has now a daily output of 35 barrels of flour and 100 bushels of meal. Both the building and that of the Capitola are of substantial brick construction. For fire protection there is a 50,000 gallon steel water tower. The mill village of the two plants has a unique and attractive feature for the comfort of the operatives. It is the provision by the company of a free garden and cow pasture for each household on the 95 acre tract of land near the plants. This plan is a source of much satisfaction to the operatives—particularly at this time of high food prices.

It is said that the company is contemplating building a knitting mill, thus furnishing its operatives and local patrons not only with food but clothing.

When Marshall acquired paved streets, electric lights, banks and other city features someone remarked that it was a "finished" town because it could grow no more since it had built up all the level space between the hills and the river. Marshall calmly disposed of this classification by extending up the hillside, attractive dwellings now rising by terraced roads to the scenic summits.

Several conditions are favorable to the development of manufacturing, especially of cotton goods, at Marshall. There is now cheap and clean power from the river, the climate is suitable not only to the actual fabric but to the health and effectiveness of the operatives, and there is a supply of efficient and intelligent operatives.

Troubles never come singly, and as we note that "the neighbors' cat has filled another quota of kittens," as the Ohio State Journal man puts it, we take it that she may look for another invasion, in the very near future, by wife's relations.—Marion Star.

D'YE BELIEVE IN SIGNS? THEN GET YOUR LUNCH HERE

S. E. Wade and J. A. Wright are the owners of a restaurant in Selby, Mich. They have a sign: "Wade Wright Inn." The picture above showing the hand painted invitation doesn't tell that the owners would do the same thing if a customer tried to Wade Wright by the cashier without stopping.

WAR BRINGS NEW STAMPS AND UNUSUAL POSTMARKS

One change that has resulted from the world war but has been noticed by few persons except philatelists is in the postage stamps issued in countries which wholly or in part have changed governments. The postmark, which generally in normal times is not so important to collectors as stamps, is now sought assiduously, especially if it comes from a district that has been in the hands of each side several times.

Of course a foreign army in occupation of a city or territory has nothing to distinguish its stamps from those it generally uses, and in such cases it is the postmark that gives value to the stamp for the collector's purpose.

Collectors in the United States are now gathering postmarks of letters sent from the American camps in France, which are stamped "U. S. Army Postal Service." They figure that if anything definite results from the peace talk the expeditionary force's postmark will be valuable because of its comparative rarity, as they believe that most of the letters coming to the United States from the soldiers abroad are sent to close friends and relatives, who for sentimental reasons will save the missives, envelopes and all.

Canadian postmarks at present appeal to the patriotic citizens of the Dominion to aid the government by subscribing to the war loan. Many postoffices in the United States stamp letters in a similar way during the first Liberty Loan campaign.

Russia's new stamps contain the Slavonic inscription: "Liberty-Equality-Fraternity." The number issued so far has not been large, as Kerensky and his followers have been too busy with more important matters. As a makeshift the Russian authorities have overprinted the old Romanoff stamps with a device representing a phrygian or Liberty cap, with crossed swords in addition to the legend that appears on the latest issue.

Finland's new stamps contain an old time armorial design of a lion trampling on a sabbler. Besides "Finland" they have on them the native name of the country, "Suomi."

Poland has a new stamp, but it is "Made in Germany."

Quick changes which have taken place in China, have afforded a rich field for those interested in philately, although it has not been easy to get hold of the stamp issues. In the recent brief return to the throne of Emperor Huan Tung it is said the stamps of the republic were overprinted with an imperial emblem or inscription. As the young man held his place for only a week the overprinted stamps should be valuable.

War stamp collectors with their stamps and postmarks can read off a history of the war by glancing through the pages of their albums. They are constantly on the alert to add to their stores, as can be testified to by importers, exporters, army and navy officers and employes of steamship lines, who are importuned by diligent philatelists desiring to "go through the waste baskets." War stamp collecting has also opened a new source of revenue to janitors in office buildings, who look out for stamps and sell them.
