The message of the president, however, indicates an advance and a stronger determination than ever to carry on the war until its supreme aims have been achieved and Ger-many's military terrorism and mania for the political and economic mastery as well as for the enslavement of the universe are crushed out of existence. President Wilson is rapidly assuming the leadership of the entente in the war. He speaks with a greater amount of authority and weight than any of the everytives of the alless and excuse for the German pacifist agen-cies in the countries of the entente to bring their nefarious activities to a

It may be recalled that when Count Bernstorff left the United States he argued in favor of negotiations be-tween this nation and his own "on any basis whatsoever." For he realiz-ed that once negotiations were started again the peril of war would be defer-red and perhaps averted. If Prince Buslow could have brought the entente to the international council table for negotiations of a peace by accepting Lloyd George's workingmen's speech as a basis for discussion he would have considered that he had saved his native land and that he had secured for it a draw. Able and Unscrupulous,

Prince Buelow is without any excep-tion the most able if the most un-scrupulous German statesman of the present day, head and shoulders in the former respect above any of his countrymen. He is the least Teuton of German statesmen and diplomats No Peace Without Victory.

President Wilson's message conveys an assurance to the other powers of the entente, as well as to Germany and her allies, that the war will be carried through to the bitter end, until all the aims which he has set forth have been accomplished, and that there will be no inconclusive peace—without victory; a peace which would enable Germany to begin rebuilding her military might and reforming her. it is just because of his refusal to take things too seriously that he has suc-ceeded in skimming without mishap over political ice so thin that it would no matter what the subject. His utterances are always interesting, re-plete with delicate irony and oddly humorous touches. Epigram follows epigram and with genial cynicism and wit savoring of Paris rather than of Berlin there is plenty of worldly wisdom and practical common which relieve his remarks of the

which relieve his remarks of the charge of superficiality.

No one can state a disagreeable fact more blandly or pay a compliment more neatly. He has no trace of the sentimentality that is so distinguished a trait of the German character. Nor could any one be less of a doctrinaire, than this grand-nephew of the famous Von Humboldt. He openly scoffs at altruism; has no sympathy whatsoever with wild goose chases for the benefit of humanity, or with any other Quixotic undertaking: glories in the fact, and has ever before him not what is best for the world at large, but what is best for Germany. For that he would cheerfully sacrifice everything, even the kalser and the Hohenzo-ern dynasty. The one all dominating object to him to which everybody and everything else is always subordinated, is "Deutschland ueber Alles.

Independent of the Kaiser. Enormously rich, and therefore in-dependent of the kaiser, from whom he has nothing to expect in emoluments or rank, he resigned the chan-cellorship when no longer able to agree with him, and withdrew to Italy. But when the war broke out he placed his services once more at the disposal of the German nation, and after having succeeded for many months in delaying the entrance of Italy into the war settled in Switzer-land, at Lucerne. There he has made his headquarters ever since. He occupies one of the most beautiful villas on the lake and his staff monopolize two large adjacent hotels. Thence he directs not the espionage but the pro-German pacifist propaganda in the countries banded against Germany, and the Germanophile interests in neutral countries.

His cilia and the hotels that harbor his staff have been rather aptly de-scribed as "Prince Buelow's Poison Gas Pactory."

Buelow's poison gas is primarily the propaganda of pacifist sentiment among the nations at war with Ger among the nations at war with Germany. And for this work he has apparently unlimited means, furnished not only by the Berlin government, but also by the great business interests of Germany, to which it is a matter of life and death that the war should be brought to a speedy close. Ever since the summer of 1915 far s'ghted Germans such as Buelow have realized that it was useless to look for the realization of the pledges made by the kaiser of a victory so complete that after entering Paris in triumph he would sign in London a treaty of peace which would place the United Stater at his mercy in a political and economic sense.

Buelow sald that the best that could be hoped for was a drawn game, and that the most likely way of achieving this end was not on the battlefield but by stirring popular sentiment in the entente in favor of a peace, either collective or separate. He inaugurated in Great Britain, in France, in Italy, in Russia and in the United States the most insidious, ingenious and far reaching propagands with this purpose in view. Every conceivable method was adopted to foster the idea that the entente power immediately concrned was wasting its blood and its treasure, besides sacrificing its interests, to satisfy the lust of conquest of allies who were in no sense grateful. It cannot be denied that in many in-stances the prince was successful in thus sowing mistrust and in impairing that mutual confidence which is necfront as in diplomacy.

Centered on British Labor. In Great Britain the Beulow poison gas was devoted in the main part to the working classes and to the labor unions. Ever since the summer of 1915 the British government has been obstructed and hampered in the war by labor unrest, which last fall as sumed so serious a form that the London Times and other leading organs devoted whole columns to discussion of what was declared to be the peril arising from the growth of revolution-ary sentiments among the working classes. Strikes were started on the most frivolous pretexts, and although most frivolous pretexts, and although the government had secured legislation to punish strikes under the defense of the realm act it did not dare to apply the penalties.

It was not that the cabinet dreaded the loss of support of the labor element in parliament but because the ministers knew that any interruption in the output of munitions and war supplies would paralyze the British armies. The British labor unions would have taken part in the aborted ceeded in skimming without mishap over political ice so thin that it would have given way under the weight of a statesman of a more ponderous mind.

While he is not a great orator, he is one of the most fascinating speakers in Europe. His touch is ever light, to convey any British labor unions refused to the English Seamen's unions refused to convey any British labor delegates

Prince von Buelow's agents also found many useful allies in their pacifist propaganda in members of the house of lords, such as the Earl Russell; in certain members of the house of commons and in the ranks of the educated and well to do classes, even among the members of the English press. These pacifists actually embarked on crusades to encourage men to resist the draft and argued against the wickedness of squandering British blood and treasure for the defense of foreign nations.
In Italy, Prince Buelow's poison gas

agents have diligently spread far and wide the idea that the nation was forced against its will and against its best interests into the war, by threats of Great Britain to bombard the coasts of the peninsula. Stories to this effect have even been circulated among Italians in the United States by men whose identity is no secret, and who are likely ere long to be called to ac-count because they have been playing the German game here.

Then, when owing to the difficulties of maritime transport, Italy was re-duced to terrible straits through the lack of coal the Buelow agents insisted that it was purposely withheld by Great Britain, and above all, by the United States to spare Austriathe United States to spare Austra-Hungary at the expense of Italy. In corroboration of this story it was pointed out that America had re-frained from declaring war on the dual empire. Nor was it until con-gress proclaimed war a few weeks ago on Austria, that the Italian people could be convinced that the United on Austria, that the Italian people could be convinced that the United States was really their ally.
Then, too, the Italian troops on the northeastern front were flooded in last November and December with Italian newspapers either printed in Austria or by Italian socialists, giving fright-ful but wholly false descriptions of conditions at home. Faked copies of the Giornale d'Italia of ...ome were circulated broadcast among Cadorna's troops telling description and of troops telling of revolution and of sanguinary riots in Rome, Naples, Palermo, even in Florence, and at Genoa, with English and French troops shooting down the rioters. No wonder then, that the Italian troops with their minds thus poisoned, gave with their minds thus poisoned, gave way in December at a critical point and at a critical moment, along a stretch of thirty miles, necessitating the retreat from the entire 400 mile front won by Cadorna after two years of the hardest fighting. It was Prince Buelow, rather than any Austrian or German general, who was responsible for the disaster to Italian arms last month

In Russia when Prince Buelow realmatter how many Germanophile ministers there might be in office under the czar nor how strong the Teuton influences at the court of Petrograd. the Duma would never permit the government to abandon the entente and conclude a separate peace, his agent devoted themselves to stirring up the forces of socialism, of anarchy and of Nihilism, with ...e result that the entire country is now in a state of the entire country is now in a state of indescribable chaos and has ceased to be a military factor. Indeed, the kaiser has been enabled to transfer most of his picked troops from the Russian to the Franco-Anglo-Flemish-American and Italian fronts.

With regard to France the Buelow polson gas has affected the labor element there much less than in Eng-land. French labor, like the French people as a whole, remains intensely patriotic and resolved to push through the war to the bitter end. But those who have fallen a prey to this polson gas are certain factions of the socialist element as well as a certain number of unsavory political financiers and financial politicians aided and abetted by gangs of shady adventurers, but usually provided with more or less authentic letters of naturalization as citizens of entente or neutral

The scandals in connection with the Bonnet Rouge and of other organs of this Buelow engineered and financed propaganda have been recently aired in all the criminal investigations fol-lowing the arrest of Bolo assha. The culprits—that is to say, the instru-ments of Buelow's manoeuvres to create popular sentiment in favor of a separate peace by France at the expense of Great Britain and of the United States—are now being brought to justice. It is unnecessary to recur to the matter again here, save to congratulate America's ally and oldest friend. France, on the presence at the helm of the ship of state at this junc-ture of such a fearless, capable and patriotic premier as honest old Georges Clemenceau and on the wholesome condition of public sentiment in France.

It would be superfluous to call attention to the activities of Prince Buelow's pacifist agents in the United States were it not for the extraordinary fashion in which the board of nary fashion in which the board of temperance, prohibition and public morals of Methodist church appears to have lent itself to his manoeuvres, perhaps quite innocently.

The Buelow poison gas seems to reek in every line of the clip sheet which the board has opread broadcast throughout the Union alleging that "drink and the devil of syphilis are whipping American soldiers who have whipping American soldiers who have reached France into the guardhouses and hospitals by the thousands." And further on. "Throughout this country a feeling of bitterness, dangerous in the extreme is arising with menacing eyes toward France. The mothers who have reared sons, strong and clean, and who have given them with glad if aching hearts—women who have loved France and glorified hermare now muttering that our hours are are now muttering that our boys are wanted for the profits of their de-bauchery, and not to take their deaths in strength and in cleanliness.

While these words may not have been instigated by Buelow's agents they assuredly serve his nefarious For what is more calcula to create ill will between the people of these two sister and allied republics than the assertion issued with the authority of this board of the Meth-odist church that France was wanting the American soldier boys not for de-fense but for "the profits of their de-bauchery?"

The departments of war and of the navy at Washington and the generals in command of the American troops in France are all bitter in their repu-

in France are all bitter in their repu-diation of these assertions denouncing them as a shameful calumny of the United States troops in Europe and as an abominable insult offered to France. But it is greatly to be feared that their denials will not reach as far as the Methodist clip sheet, and that the harm done by the latter will be incalculable, especially in the rural districts of the United States,

If Prince Beulow is so anxious to force an early peace by means of his poison gas pacifist propaganda it is because he. like his former secretary Richard von Kuhlmann, now minister of foreign affairs, is united with the great business interests of Germany in the determination to bring the war to an early close, no matter how premature from our point of view. knows, and they know, that the longer the conflict lasts the more difficult will it become to inaugurate that great plan of the business interests. the support of the government to re build the formerly vast oversea trade of Germany.

The organization for this far reaching campaign is already completed. Upon its success Germany depends to escape the horrors of national bankruptcy. But it can only be put into execution after the war if the powers of the entente refrain from closing their ports to German shipping and
