WELFARE ENTHUSIASTS TO REQUEST ACTION BY THE STATE LEGISLATURE

Hundreds of Thousands Spent to Care for Animal Life, Yet Funds for the Preservation and Correction of Child Life Are Withheld—Defeats High Aims of Juvenile Court Law.

Amendment of the law making it necessary for the state architect to approve plans for asylums before they can be carried into execution will be the first step to be urged by proponents of social welfare when the state legislature convenes next Wednesday, in the opinion of Judge John H. Cathey, clerk of the juvenile court, and other vitally interested in the work among delinquent, abnormal or underprivileged folk.

It is pointed out by these proponents that the legislature of 1917 authorized the sale of $250,000 in bonds to enlarge the asylums, but that nothing had been done as the state architect has been unable to furnish plans for the additions and alterations necessary.

Nothing has been done to care for the accumulation of cases of feeble-mindedness among children since the Caswell Training school at Kinston burned down more than two years ago. Judge Cathey has had one complaint in more than a year and another for more than eight months. Constant care of someone is required in both cases, although families in moderate circumstances made to bear the burden of each case.

Judge Cathey states that he has cases of insanity that have burdened families for more than a year, and that he can get no relief from the state because of the lack of room in the white asylum at Morganton, the asylum for the colored folk at Goldsboro, for the epileptic at Raleigh, for the delinquent boys at the Jackson Training school, Concord, and for the delinquent girls at the Smacaranand Manor, in Moore county. It is impossible for the juvenile court to function, he says, until provision is made to care for those who are homeless, or for those who come from homes conducive to delinquency. This opinion is voiced by juvenile court judges in all parts of North Carolina.

A bill to authorize any group of counties to join in equally and build at a centrally located place an institution to care for these juveniles would be of great benefit, Judge Cathey says. There is no public children's home maintained by taxation in Western North Carolina, except in Buncombe county. All juveniles in all other counties have to depend on the Jackson Training school at Concord, and Smacaranand Manor, in Moore county. And since these are constantly full to the point of overflow, there is no place for them to send these children, despite the fact that they must pay taxes and that the fulfill the law in the establishment of juvenile courts.

"Child welfare work, which covers every phase of child life, from the neglect and delinquency to feeble-mindedness is growing in its magnitude," declared Judge Cathey, "and the public is just beginning to realize what the welfare law means. It has been copied by several states, but it has never been carried out in this state.

"This state and the United States have appropriated millions of dollars for the care and protection of animal life, but they have been very slow to provide money and means for the care of child life.

"Lack of sympathy on the part of politicians has kept the best men and women out of juvenile court work. Our present child welfare and juvenile court acts are the most liberal and far reaching ever placed on the statute books of any state. But we lack means, both in men and money, to carry out the provisions of this act to the best advantage of the child and state. Our law is for the guidance of the parents or guardian, but not necessarily for the punishment of anyone. Punishment is not necessary to correction if we have properly trained welfare superintendents and ample institutions. To attain this goal we must have more institutions and better paid workers; else we cannot attain the high aims as contemplated by our present laws.

There has been strong objection in all parts of the state to the employment by the board of county commissioners of criminal officers as superintendents of public welfare. The idea of mixing criminal work with semi-religious and semi-educational work defeats the aims and purposes of the juvenile law, in the opinion of those interested in its enactment.

CONFEDERATES TO GET MORE MONEY IN JUNE

LEGISLATURE INCLUDES ADDITIONAL WIDOWS IN MEASURE

Those Who Married Old Soldiers Since 1875 May Now Draw Pensions—Old Law Amended.

Changes in the cast of the state legislature affecting pensions of Confederate soldiers and their widows will enable a larger group to draw money in June, 1921, if they file their application through John H. Cathey, clerk of Buncombe county superior court, it became known yesterday, when "an act to regulate the property valuation of Confederate pensioners, and an act to amend section 5159 of the consolidated statutes relating to the classification of pensions for soldiers and widows" came into official recognition.

During the recent special session of the state legislature there was so much interest in the suffrage problem and consideration of the revision act limitation, the concessions to the old soldiers and their widows gained little attention. One of the changes provided that women who married Confederate soldiers before 1875 are eligible for pension. Those who married since 1868 have not been eligible in the past.

Another change raises the limitation in section 5151 from $500 to $2,000. First collections including the additional money will be made in June, Mr. Cathey states.

TWO COMPLAINTS FILED YESTERDAY

Five hundred dollars damage for the death of one mule and $200 damages for alleged injuries to two others were claimed yesterday by C. C. Brown in a complaint filed against the Southern Railway through the office of John H. Cathey, clerk of the Buncombe county superior court. The mules were said to have been injured March 15, 1920, while en route to Goldsboro.

J. Murphy Burlison asks $2,000 damages of W. C. Hutchins, contending that the defendant entered into an agreement providing that he should saw a yard of logs as soon as he had finished sawing a yard for himself in Stocksville. He contends that the job at Stocksville was finished in December, but that the work for the plaintiff did not begin until April and that as a result of this delay the plaintiff lost money through the decline in the price of lumber.

ASHEVILLE MILLS REOPEN MONDAY

Announcement was made last night by M. D. Long, secretary of the Asheville Cotton mill, that the plant would re-open Monday, and that all of the employees would be given an opportunity to resume work.

The plant was closed December 18, following the issuance of a bonus to each of the employees, the amount varying from $500 down, according to length of service.

Issuance of a bonus to each of the employees despite the cotton and general industrial and commercial outlook was in line with the policy of the Cone interests, in Greensboro, of which the Asheville Cotton mill is a part.

HENDERSONVILLE TO GREENVILLE ROAD BACKED BY LEGION

Extension of the Asheville-Hendersonville highway to Greenville was recommended at a meeting of Hubert M. Smith, Hendersonville, branch American legion, held yesterday in Hendersonville.

The post is said to have also gone on record, last Thursday night at the annual banquet, as endorsing the stand of the Hendersonville board of trade in planning to pave and repair county roads.

Monasteries first arose in the Orient, early times.

DR. POWELL'S CAR STRUCK BY BUICK

Failing to give a signal as he turned from Haywood street into an alley leading to the Medical building, Rev. Dr. W. P. Powell yesterday caused his machine to be struck by a Buick driven by R. A. Shaw, of Chambers & Weaver company. Both cars were slightly damaged. Rev. Dr. Powell was taking a sick man to the Medical building for examination. Owing to the fact that his car was closed it was impossible for him to give a signal denoting his intention to turn.
