"Wholly Wrong Impression" of Important Facts Is Given, He Declares.

KEPT DIARY DURING DAYS BEFORE WAR
His Use of Word "Dangerous" Was Voicing British View of Convoy.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25.—(By The Associated Press.)—Declaring a "wholly wrong impression" of important historical facts had been given in one of the recently published letters of Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior under President Wilson, Joseph Daniels, who sat in the Wilson Cabinet as Secretary of the Navy, telegraphed The Associated Press tonight a story of the events which, he said, had led up to the adoption of the convoy system of protecting American ships early in the war.

Mr. Daniels' message sent from High Point, N. C., made particular reference to a statement in one of the cabinet meetings in February, 1917. "Daniels said we must not go to war with a dangerous convoy—that it would be dangerous. The letter also attributed to President Wilson a suggestion that he was not willing that any ship should take any risks of war."

"The President replied that he believed the British admiralty was wrong and those among naval officers who agreed with them were wrong. He said that he had thought long ago to have conveyed their ships. A few weeks later, I think it was the last day of March, 1917, or about that date when, before the United States entered the war, in giving Admiral Sims instructions, I told him that President Wilson had long believed that the Allies ought to use the convoy and did not agree with the British position that the British admiralty and the other Allies had practiced."

"The labor party's manifesto is easily the most striking pronouncement in England is strong, making continual and rapid growth and possessing in its ranks important intellectual elements. The program which is being carried out by the party has not for a long time advocated, is calculated to inspire much fear."
