SEA AND LAND SWEPT WITH AWFUL FORCE.

IT WAS A BIG BLIZZARD.

A Vicious Storm Makes Life Miserable for New York and Her Suburbs - A Score of Lives Lost on Jersey's Coast-Desolation in the Wake of a Gale.

The storm which swept over New York City and the North and Middle Atlantic coast for a night and a day was the worst experienced during the month of April in many years. The most disastrous feature was the lose of two schooners on the treacherous New Jersey const. From eight to ten men were lost in each of the wrecks. In the country trees were uprooted, buildings blown down and dwellings unroofed. High seas encroached on the land, did great damage to small shipping and to other property. The heavy wind caused a hawser to snap on the steamer Purltan at New York and five men were injured. The tug Underwriter was forced against pier in Brooklyn and sunk, her crew narrowly escaping. The gale was extremely severe in and around New York City ; harbor traffic was greatly impeded, and the high tides caused considerable trouble to ferries; a number of minor accidents were reported, but no serious damage was caused ; some small careely felt north of New York City, at Sandy Hook seventy miles.

fitting climax to the atrocious weather of the year. The storm was cut out for a bliz zard, but lost its icy edge in consequence of coming along too late in the season. New Yorkers who heard the wind howl and saw they woke up the roofs COVATE so far off as the East River. I repeatwith snow, with the gale increasing violence, naturally thought of the blizzard of March 12, 1888, six years ago. In more ways than one the storm resembled th great blizzard. All the conditions were practically the same, except as to the tem perature. Had the weather been as cold as t was then the snow which melted as it fell would have piled high in the streets and een rendered for the time being immovable the subsequent sleet. Rain, snow sleet cut the faces and chilled and the hands, and draggled the skirts and trouser tops of all who had to be out. Deays on the elevated roads added to the sum of misery, while the Broadway cable road had one or two stoppages. Several o the city markets were practically deserted. the storm having prevented most of the from coming in from Long armers Island and New Jersey with truck. Telegraph lines were crippled in all directions. Superintendent Humstone, o the Western Union, said in the after-"Remember the noon "Wires are disabled in all di rection, especially in the South," As if the wind, rain, snow and sleet were not enough of baleful visitants, there was a period of dense fogs in the morning. The ity was steeped in misery. Umbrellas were turned inside out, hats skylarked under the mpetus of unwonted gusts, ane eet trailed over slush-topped sidewalks Cellars were flooded, and South and West streets were covered with two feet of water. When the ferry boats came into their slips they were so high that it was almost impossible to make a connection with the bridges which trueks and heavy wagon. could go up and down. The ferry men said that the conditions were simply phenomenal The wind raged around the river front and played mad pranks with ferry boats which were forced to brave its fury, while vessels at their wharves received such a shaking up as they had not experienced in many a day. Some were sunk, and there were one or two collisions. Five members of the crew of the big Sound steamboat Puritan received injuries due directly to the storm. The steamboat was warped into her dock and a big two-inch hawser was thrown out to make her fast to the pier. The strong wind and tide made a very heavy strain, and the hawser parted with a report like the explosion of a can-The end made fast to the Purinon. tan recoiled, and cut away the rail and iron chock, and struck the mate and the hands who were adjusting the line. The flye men were thrown to the dock. Second Mate Thomas Kelly had a lacerated wound of the head, William Condon's leg was lacerated. John Mahoney and Harry Hausen had conusions of the leg and William Gattings slight wounds on the body. All but Gattings were taken to the Chambers Street Hospital Brooklyn suffered considerably from the ements. An unfinished house at Third wenue and Thirty-seventh street was reduced to kindling wood shortly after noon. The gale overthrew trees, unroofed houses and tore heavy signs from their fastenings, The ocean tugboat Underwriter was sunk at Martin's Stores, Brooklyn, Her crew of eight men had a narrow escape. A long stretch of scaffolding belonging to the Wild West Show, at Thirty-third street and Third avenue, was blown down. Many small craft were driven ashore and buildings were damaged by the storm on Long Island. The wind reached a velocity of fifty miles an hour at the United States Engineer station at Willet's Point. The long veranda was blown from the front of the Engineer headquarters and the building rocked so that the occupants vacated it, fearing that it would collapse. The sloop William Scott was blown against the railroad trestle near Rockaway Beach and began pounding with such violence that she became a total wreck. Many boats lying in Gravesend Bay off the Brooklyn Yacht Club were badly damaged, At Bay Ridge many bathing pavilions were carried out on the tide. At Brighton Beach, Coney Island, the Hotel Brighton was in danger of being washed away. The roof of the pavilion adjoining the hotel was blown off and several shanties near the Brighton Beach race track were demolished. Mariners mag the most covers that SENATOR HILL'S VIEWS. An Epitome of His Speech on the Wilson Bill.

Senator David Bennett Hill, of New York, has come out squarely against the income tax, and what he calls the "un-Democratic tariff" bills of Wilson and Voorhees. He condemns the Senate bill as unsparingly as the House bill. Both are denounced as contrary to Democratic principle, political expediency and public polic His speech in the United States Senate was the longest he ever delivered. It bore evidences of unremitting toil, deep purpose and settled conviction. It was delivered as deliberatly and cold bloodedly as a judge's charge. There was neither passion, nor elo quence, nor feeling in it. His repudiation of the Administration and of the tariff policy of the majority of his own party was as calm as if he was not a participant in the strife.
