PEERLESS QUEEN OF THE PERQUIMANS.

A DREAM.

RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED TO MISS S—E W—D.

A sudden joy surged in my heart to-night;

A loved voice on the long years' silence broke.

While every fibre of my heart awoke, To an intense delight.

How strange it seems—our meeting to-night,

How much was crowded in that moment's space;

I caught one glimpse of a beloved face—

And you were lost to sight.

You left upon my lips a hasty kiss—

I felt the pressure of your dear,

white hand;

When suddenly my clouded life seemed spanned

With a most perfect bliss.

O, how your presence thrilled me through and through

And I had watched and prayed for you so long;

So faithfully through all these years of wrong.

My heart still clung to you.

But I was proud, and so I turned away

From lips that I would give my life to touch.

O, why is it, when loving you so much I did not bid you stay?

And you remembered me through all these years—

Dark years of suffering and weary cares—

Of fruitless, longing and unanswered prayers,

And bitter cruel tears.

I could not see you, darling, for the dark;

But when I felt the touch of your dear face,

I knew that in your love's safe resting place

My soul had found its ark.

God sends me now and then a gleam of light,

To brighten up the path I did not choose;

And for my hope of heaven I would not loose

This memory of to-night.

JAMES A. KEENAN.
