Downright Ignorance is Bad.

As an instance of rash estimating on job work, we relate a recent experience of a friend of ours in a Brooklyn printery. Our friend desired to have printed 1000 eight-page pamphlets of a miniature size, the composition of which would occupy the time of a good man one full day, and for which our friend expected to have to pay at least $7 or $8. Judge of his surprise when, on showing the copy, the Brooklyn printer, after carelessly glancing at it, offered to do the job for $2. He did not get the job, for his figuring so staggered our friend by its absurdity, as to cause him to doubt his ability to do the work at all. It is just such idiotic estimating as this that has brought the printing trade into disrepute, and driven many of its members to dishonest trickery—for all men do not, alas! suspect the lowest estimate and refuse to subject their work to the tender mercies of the cheap printer.—Newspaperdom.
