NOT THE TIME FOR STRIKING.

The Charlotte Labor Journal aptly puts the question of labor upheavals when it cautions workers that "this is not a propitious time for strikes, when everyone is working to make the best of a bad condition which promises betterment."

The Journal points specifically to the strike at High Point, N. C., in which a number of men and women in several lines of work, were either striking as aggressors or a specific question or went out in sympathy for their fellow workers. In the opinion of The Labor Journal, it will be time a plenty for workers to plan strikes, or decide if such a thing is necessary after the codes governing different lines have become effective. Even then, The Labor Journal argues, if there is to be an argument between employers and employees it should not be gone about through "bootleg" labor organizations such as are trying to gain a foothold in the South at this time.

For years, when general conditions began looking up there has been a concerted movement by "bootleg unions" to create dissent and strife among the employed in the South. Strike after strike has been resuscitated by people going into these fly-by-night organizations that had no real backing and in many instances were purely a gainful setup for those who were the supposedly leaders of the working class.

There is plenty of room in the South today for improvement in working conditions, generally speaking, and it is to the interest of the laboring man to see that his rights are protected, but it is not a time to be led astray by every wind that blows, nor is it a time for listening to the beratings of those who would "lift the poor downtrodden laboring class into the realms where they belong," as the average Communistic minded agitator would have it. Employers in every section are showing that they want to do the fair and just thing, and in many instances more than the fair thing, when they follow the president's re-employment plan. Many, very probably the greater majority of employers have been giving their workers employment through the lean months that have passed when in reality they would have been much better off had they closed the doors of their plants and boarded up the windows. Men have been enabled to keep the wolf away from their doors by the fact that they had been working for a company or business that looked upon them, not merely as another fellow who had no job, but as a man who was a friend and had a family to be supported that would starve were it not for the help they received from an employer who was losing money every month he operated.

These are things that are not to be overlooked. And, too, just because there is to be a code adopted which calls for higher wages and less hours is no reason for the average worker to think business is booming and that prosperity has come down the chimney like Santa Claus. Many employers who have signed the voluntary NRA agreement are wondering today just where the money will come from within the next couple of months to meet the payroll, how they will manage to meet the conditions which they have or will within a short time agree to operate under. Concerns throughout the South want the program to go through, they want to pay their help more money, and give them shorter working hours, and for the most part are willing and agree to do everything they possibly can to better working conditions, realizing that it means all. However, these same employers have plenty to worry about without being pesked with red-minded labor organizers who are in reality "bootleggers" and are not true representatives of the laboring classes.

It is not a time to go off half-cocked, and especially is this true in the matter of "joining the union" that has any of the earmarks of communism. A card man for years, the editor of The Times, now employs union workers and has no quarrel to pick with organized labor. We see no reason for the laboring man not having an organization that will look after his interests, secure a square deal for him, see that he is treated fairly, but we see a lot of people in the middle of a bad fix if they begin listening to the rosy stories that the average agitator can spout at this time. Like The Labor Journal, we think the present is a fine time for both workmen and business men to attend strictly to their own affairs, push and pull together, and pray, not squabble.

MEDICINE SHOW IS FINE THING

Brevard was treated to an extraordinary fine thing last week when "Big Chief Ben" deigned to come to the town and provide entertainment for a whole week at no cost whatever to the town, and sell those wonderful remedies that are most certain to cure all the aches, pains and ills of the people of the community.

There ought to be provisions made for keeping something like "Big Chief Ben's" outfit in Brevard all the time, so that high class entertainment could be provided with no cost, and folks could buy a decent sort of medicine, which when taken for biliousness would also cure the side pleurisy, tuberculosis and ingrowing toenails.

Drug stores in Brevard have too long preyed on the unsuspecting people of this county. They have robbed and ruined, killed and maimed person after person by selling stuff that a "big chief" would absolutely refuse to handle. Doctors of the county have cheated, lied and overcharged the people here until it is a shame that we couldn't keep a "big chief" here the year round to minister to the medical needs of the people, give decent diagnosis of cases and prescribe for them intelligently. This thing of paying a doctor making calls is all the bosh, and aside from being foolish is an outrageous thing to be permitted in a community like Brevard, when there could be a "big chief" in the community if we were so minded.

Then too, if we could have a "big chief" here all the time, a fellow could buy these nice little boxes of candy for a dime that contain so much delicious eating. Of course, the "big chief" has to have a little profit for handling candy, one couldn't expect a man to sell candy like was sold by the "big chief" here last week unless he were getting some thing for his trouble, say eight or nine cents profit on the box, for with each box of candy that the "big chief" sold here last week, one might have gotten a blanket or other appropriate prize. Of course there weren't so many blankets given here last week, 'cause it was the "big chief's" first week here, but it was lots of fun buying the ten-cent boxes and looking for the lucky coupons, anyway.

It's a pity that all the business houses in Brevard could not be operated like the "big chief" outfit got by last week. This is truly impressed upon us all right now, for delinquent tax list will be advertised in The Times next week, and oh, what a long list that will be. If folks in Brevard who are in business had sense enough to operate like the "big chief" business is carried on, lots of the fellows wouldn't have their names in the paper next week. Here again, there is something bad wrong with the town. Some of the fellows in Brevard who are in business pay a great big license fee each year just for the privilege of staying here, when, if they were intelligent like a "big chief" they could get by without paying anything at all. But no, they don't care to take advantage of an intelligent procedure like that, and in consequence, they haven't got the wherewithal to pay license fees, street taxes sidewalk taxes, railroad taxes, school taxes, county taxes, church fees, etc.

People are progressing in Brevard—witness the "big chief" outfit last week. It used to be that a "big chief" had to pay a license when he came to Brevard to put on his performance, sell that good goey candy, tickets to win a blanket, and medicine that would clean teeth, cure spavin and clean out a drain pipe all from the same bottle. But that is a thing of the past now. A "big chief" can locate here, sell candy, give away blankets, prescribe for ills and aches and not be pestered with things like a deficit in the budget. Fine, fine.

Another good thing that went with the "big chief" show was the fact that a lot of people didn't have to attend the Masonic Orphanage entertainment at the High school Tuesday night. If the "big chief" show had not been here, in all probability those little old orphan children, who mean nothing to us, inasmuch as it's not our hard luck that they have no father and mother, would have probably drawn a full house, and carried off a lot of money. As it was they got about twenty dollars, charging admission, while the "big chief" put on his show free, with a lot of real opera singers, New York stage comedians, and Hollywood performers, cracking a lot of CLEAN jokes, and incidentally selling big boxes of delicious candy for a dime, to say nothing of a chance to get a blanket free.

The "big chief" didn't tell this newspaper in as many words, but we are led to believe that he is going about from town to town, giving people a high class, first rate, entertaining show, selling them candy that cost as much as a cent or more a box, and curing all ills just because he feels sorry for downtrodden and sick-ridden people. Of course he has a little expense in running his "big chief" outfit but that comes from somewhere else, what little it takes—for he doesn't have to pay any county and town license like other folks do, and he doesn't have a house and lot with attendant street and sidewalk, school, railroad, highway and water system taxes coming due every year.

What a pity we couldn't have a "big chief" bunch here every week. All of which is to say that The Transylvania Times is far from pleased with such an outfit being permitted in the town.

FINE PEACHES GROWN NEAR TRAVELERS REST

Some of as fine peaches as have been seen here in many moons were brought in from Travelers Rest last week by Lon Chapman of the Calvert section, who avers that never in his life has he seen such luscious fruit as that in South Carolina.

Incidentally, Mr. Chapman left some of his finest specimen at The Times office, where they were enjoyed as peaches should be.

HONEY FOR THE EDITOR

Sweet tooth at The Times office was adequately satisfied on Monday when two of our subscribers, T. E. Waters, operator of the Brevard Shoe shop and J. Wade Dickson, of Route three, each brought in as fine sourwood honey as one could wish for.

SINIARD MOURNS THE LOSS OF PET CROW

"Tom's dead," was the sad story that C. M. Siniard had to tell Monday morning when seen uptown. Tom was a well known pet crow, that "had plenty of sense and was a pet extraordinary."

Some person, evidently not knowing the value of Tom, or with malicious intent, passed by the Siniard home in North Brevard, and evidently was a little too quick with a rock, for Tom was found dead Sunday about church time, with tell tale bruises on his body.

While Tom could not talk, as some pets are "supposed" to do, he could imitate a dog, and could boo-boo when he was hungry or wanted to attract attention.
