AT THE CLEMSON THEATRE

Action and drama are featured in the two pictures scheduled at the Clemson Theatre for the week, with "Flaming Gold," a western action drama starring Bill Boyd, Mae Clarke and Pat O'Brien billed for Friday and Saturday of this week, a story of the tropical oilfields, terrifying, suspenseful and colorful.

Sinclair Lewis' book, "Ann Vickers" that drew a storm from critics when published, but nevertheless was a best seller for months, is basis for the story in which Irene Dunne and Walter Huston are starred. It is a story of a woman who was different, who wanted life in its fullest, but who was buffeted about by the winds of a cruel fate. Those who read Ann Vickers in serial and book form, will be delighted to see the drama on the Clemson screen, and those who failed to read the story have a great treat in store.

We are now working on a class of five hundred to be initiated at Hickory November 25th. Every Camp in North Carolina should see that they get on this honor list by furnishing one or more candidates for this big day, certainly every Camp in western district should get on the honor roll, so doing you will show President Ledshaw that you appreciate this visit to N. C. and our district.

Head Watchman, C. P. Goforth and I wrote six applications down at Kings Mountain last Thursday. Applications can be secured most everywhere now, provided some one goes after them. Why not wake up all over Western North Carolina and try hard to build up our membership in every Camp. You know the winter months are the best months for lodge work and remember this: If we do not get them, some other Company or Society will, so its up to all of us to carry the banner of Woodcraft into the fields, forests and homes giving invitations as we go, to those we meet of the way, to join up with us, try it in your section.
