OAKLAND NEWS

(By Mrs. Lee F. Norton)

The folks of this and the Bohoney section are delighted with the improvement being made on the road leaving No. 28 at Oakland post office and going into the Bohoney section. The only fault, and there is some one to find fault with everything, we think the work should have been done with local labor as there are so many in this community that need work. Anyway we are proud of the improvement.

The recent bad weather has put our Sunday school on background on account of the little link of road from the highway to the church house. We are wondering if we could interest the CWA authorities in helping to make that little stretch of road possible in muddy weather. Nature would be fine if we could.

SMALL GROWERS BE AIDED BY CONTRACT

The AAA corn-hog reduction contracts have been amended to allow small growers to participate in the reduction program W. W. Shay, swine specialist at North Carolina State College, announced Monday.

The former minimum limit excluded farmers with a base average of less than four litters a year. The limit has been removed and any hog producer may now enter.

Formerly, the grower could reduce only 25 per cent, but now he may reduce as much more than 25 per cent as he wishes. Thus, a grower producing an average of one litter a year may stop production of hogs altogether and receive benefit payments of $5 a head on three-fourths of the number of hogs he averaged producing during 1932 and 1933.

Another change in the hog control program will permit farmers an exemption from the processing tax on their own pork and hog products up to 300 pounds, provided that they do not sell more than 1,000 pounds. If they sell more than 1,000 pounds, then none of their sales are exempted.

Corn-hog producers who grow less than 10 acres of corn, may sign the contract and reduce only their hog production, but they must not increase the amount of corn to be grown this year.

Mr. Shay said that C. L. Chambers, federal extension service field agent for the southern states, has held a number of meetings in eastern North Carolina to train county agents in the administering of the corn-hog contracts. Other meetings will be held soon in the central and western parts of the state.

Some of the agents have already held educational meetings and others will hold theirs as soon as the cotton sign-up has been completed. After the educational meeting, contracts will be mailed the different growers for signature.

Her many friends here learned with sorrow of the death of Miss Victoria Galloway. The orphanage at Calvert stands in memory of the faithfulness of her and her deceased sister, Mary, as splendid citizens—true to the church and many helpless orphans.

Many near-fatal accidents occurred on the roads here Sunday with cars because of the ice.

We are glad to learn of a proposed game preserve here for the protection of wild and other animals which are beneficial to the farmer, and also for the protection of the farmer and his stock from the "kill-em-all" sportsmen who do not want a permit.

Couples must pull together or will pull apart.

ALL HOG GROWERS ELIGIBLE TO SIGN

All hog producers, regardless of their past hog production, now are eligible for hog reduction payments under a new ruling on the 1934-35 reduction contract, it was announced by W. W. Shay, swine extension specialist at State College.

Previous AAA ruling specified that if the 1932-33 hog litter average was less than three, the contract producer was not required to reduce hog production in 1934, and in any event was not eligible to receive any hog reduction payments.

Under the new ruling, Shay says all producers will be entitled to reduction payments of $5 per head on a number of hogs equal to 75 percent of their past average of market hog production, provided their litter average and production of hogs for market is reduced not less than 25 percent. In cases where the litter average is less than four, this means that the contracting producer will have to reduce by one litter in order to comply with the contract, even though this will constitute more than a 25 percent reduction from the litter average.

The change in ruling was made in consideration of an unexpected interest in the corn-hog program among small hog farmers. These farmers now will have an opportunity to share in the proceeds of the processing tax being collected on the slaughtering of all hogs for market regardless of by whom sold.
