STATES RIGHTS SHOULD CEASE IN SOME CASES

Regardless of how the average person feels about states rights, and as repugnant as the idea would be to many to have national statutes and national enforcement which would displace the sovereignty of the several commonwealths the fact remains that in at least some states federal intervention would be deemed fair and proper, and especially is this argument true in support of the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill.

In an able discourse on this subject The Greenville News last Sunday editorialized as follows:

With the opening of hearings this week before the Senate judiciary committee on the Costigan-Wagner anti-lynching bill, attention will be directed again to the efforts that have been made over the last decade to invoke federal powers in the punishment of lynchers.

The present measure is very similar to the Dyer bill which passed the House in 1922 and was defeated only by a filibuster in the Senate. Apparently there is a strong sentiment for its passage today, and while there are many citizens who look with doubt upon this move to inject federal authority further into state affairs, it must be conceded that the trend of events in the last year or so in bringing federal powers more vigorously into the effort to capture and punish criminals enhances the chance of enactment of the pending bill.

The measure does not make lynching itself a federal offense, merely defining the crime as the act of any "mob or riotous assemblage composed of three or more persons acting in concert, without authority or law, for the purpose of depriving any person of his life or doing him physical injury." Such a definition, it would seem, would cover many Chicago gangsters slaying as well as acts of mobs of citizens of otherwise good standing. The measure under the laws of the state, but only if state officers are lax in prosecution or jurors obtainable for a state court are opposed to punishment for the lynching.

In addition, however, the measure does make it a federal offense for state or local officers to fail to make all diligent efforts to protect a person from injury at hands of a mob, and penalty is a fine up to $5000, or imprisonment up to five years or both. Any county in which a person is killed by a mob would be fined $10,000 to be collected by the federal authorities, who are given the right to collect by property levy, mandamus or other appropriate measures. The fine goes to the victim's dependents.

The measure is, naturally, objectionable to those who sincerely feel that it is an improper invasion of state judicial processes by the federal government. But it must be admitted that the laxness of state authorities in punishing such crimes, and particularly instances of open declaration of approval of a lynching by the governor of a state, strengthen the case for such a measure. It is difficult to get away from the argument that if states deliberately fail to make proper efforts for the protection of citizens, federal authority should be invoked.

Transylvania isn't such a bad place after all, when compared with other towns in North Carolina. As a matter of proof, we point to a neighboring western county in which court opened Monday with five murder cases on the docket, plus a hundred or more other criminal charges.

Several sections of North and South Carolina seem inclined to claim Basil Banghart as a former resident. Anybody can have him in so far as we're concerned. While he did hang out in this county for a few months we didn't raise him, thank goodness.

Federal man coming into the mountains to collect $2 on each gallon of moonshine, according to The Morganton News-Herald. Reminds us of an old recipe about making rabbit dumplings—"First, catch a nice fat rabbit....."

There will be a murderer in the upper end of the county one of these bright mornings, and no one will know who he is. No semblance of a safety flash is to be seen at the "curve trestle" above Rosman where the highway threads under the railroad—evidently destroyed by fellows who had nothing else to do. Some motorists will be killed there due to wantonness and the person who destroyed the guard-flash spots will in reality be a murderer.

Another week gone by and no Chamber of Commerce started. Wonder if that fellow Fayssoz hypnotized any of us and forgot to "snap his finger."

Days come and go and the swimming pool stays in about the same condition—lots of hole and nothing permanent. Hope we have not been asleep at the switch and let this all-important project fall through.

Gun-toting went out way ahead of the hoop-skirt and bustle, but one is almost led to believe that it will have to again become stylish in order to have protection of one's self and property. Hold-ups, kidnappings, and other practices are entirely too numerous and are getting too close home for comfort. Calamity would very probably follow in the wake of promiscuous use of firearms, but at least they would give a feeling and a certain degree of protection.

Two hundred farmers in North Carolina who kept accurate cost sheets on chickens find that an average of $1.17 per hen, over and above all home grown and bought feeds was realized. Transylvania county does not furnish enough eggs for use in this county, three to four thousand dozens each week being bought by local concerns, some for local sales and others to supply customers who look to Brevard and Transylvania county business houses for eggs. Think it over.... There ought to be some way to remedy this condition.

If it doesn't rain this week you can drive right up to the church and next Sunday is our regular preaching day at Lake Toxaway Baptist church, so give our pastor a large congregation.

It is reported that the young people are planning to practice singing one night each week at the church. No date has been set as yet to begin but we hope they will begin soon for good singing is the life of a Sunday school. Some of our good singers have moved and can't come but we have plenty left to make a good class if they will get together and practice a little. C. R. Clark, our Sunday school superintendent, makes a fine leader and we feel sure our good friend Mr. Randolph will come and lead for them once in awhile. I assure them I will enjoy listening to them when they get started.

 District Manager

The ladies' night at Waynesville Friday night was a grand success. Rev. F. H. Leatherwood, the new Camp Secretary ate more cake than any one else. I furnished the coffee and the ladies baked the cakes, but the men did most of the eating. As the result of this social meeting I wrote two applications for Camp No. 226. A thirty day membership contest was started and another social meeting will be held at close of the contest.

Our district led all other districts for January according to bulletin from state managers office. We can lead every month this year if all our Camps wake up and get their Camps in order, and of course the members must assist the FIELD MEN and the CAMP OFFICERS at all times in order to make the grade each and every month.
