INTERESTING ARTICLE IS COMPOSED BY YOUNG BANKS

Pendleton Banks, the 10-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Banks, and grandson of Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Pendleton, has written a timely article on garbage and its disposal, a copy of which is printed below.

Young Pendleton is in the sixth grade at the Brevard grammar school, and shows marked ability in literary and other lines of education for one so youthful.

Following is Pendleton's article:

Garbage
In this article I have tried to cover plainly the two subjects, namely: (1) The removal and (2) disposal of garbage in Brevard.

First Removal
I have noticed that everywhere in Brevard people are having to dig their backyards with piles of garbage, because of the backwardness of Brevard in securing and maintaining a garbage removal system. I don't care to criticize the management of Brevard but I do think that the garbage could be removed at least twice a week. I have seen very striking examples of garbage service and I wish Brevard would follow these examples.

Second Disposal
I hate to see beautiful valleys disfigured with ugly garbage dumps. Dump your garbage in such places as old wells and deserted gold mines (the latter referring to "up Kings Creek.") Brevard is supposed to be a town of beautiful scenery, but it won't continue to be so very long if every valley harbors a garbage dump. And when you do dump your garbage, cover it with leaves or sawdust.

FARMER NOW HAS HIS BEST CHANCE FOR RECOGNITION

The following timely article was written by an authority at Clemson college primarily for cotton growers of South Carolina, but is equally applicable to Transylvania farmers:

Clemson College, March 12—Re-stating a former suggestion that South Carolina farmers have in the cotton acreage adjustment campaign the finest opportunity they have ever had to establish themselves in a well planned and sound system of farming and farm living, Dr. W. W. Long, director of the extension service, urges that farmers enter without delay into a program of soil building and sustenance farming, along with wise cash crop production, and thus secure in time a full measure of well being and security.

Answering first of all the often asked question of farmers regarding what can be done with land rented to the government, Dr. Long quotes the cotton contract, which provides the following uses for the land taken out of cotton production:

"Soil-improving crops; erosion-preventing crops; food crops for consumption by the producer on his farm; feed crops for the production of livestock or livestock products for consumption or use by the producer on his farm; or following; or such other uses as may be permitted by the secretary or his authorized agent."

Since it is clear, then, that the farmer cannot grow on the contracted acres any crop for sale directly or indirectly, Dr. Long calls attention to the importance of what J. Phil Campbell, of the Replacement Crops Section, A.A.A., says on the first step towards a sounder system of farming:

"The first thought of the farmer who signs a contract should be to use as much of the contracted acres as possible in such manner as will conserve fertility, and thus enable him, in the future, to obtain greater returns from his farm by producing on it the amount of farm goods which he can sell and use profitably, and produce them with the lowest possible labor and cash outlay. A profitable farm furnishes its owner and his family a good living, and each year becomes a better and better family home. However, much of the lands in cotton have been for a long time getting poorer and poorer each year as a result of clean cultivation. The wise farmer, therefore, will see in this plan the opportunity of a lifetime to use a large portion of his land for soil-improvement crops, erosion-prevention crops, and pasture and meadow crops as a first step in readjusting his program."

"What's the matter?" called the man from back seat.

"I thought the young lady said 'stop,'" answered the chauffeur.

"Well, she wasn't talking to you."

"Is your wife garrulous?"

"Well, if I suddenly went deaf and dumb, it would take her a week to discover it."

SOME BARY

A mother, testifying on behalf of her son, swore that he "worked on a farm ever since he was born."

Triumphantly the opposing lawyer leaned toward her and thundered: "You tell this court that your son worked on a farm ever since he was born?"

"I do."

"What did he do the first year?"

"He milked," she answered.

WAITING FOR THE SIGNAL

"I heard the absent-minded Professor Jones driving his car into the garage at daybreak this morning. Where do you suppose he had been all night?"

"Well, Mrs. Jones told my wife that he saw a red lantern beside an excavation down the street and had 'at there waiting for it to change to green."

CATTLE GRAZING HURTS WOODLANDS

Grazing on woodlands is harmful to both the cattle and the timber, warns R. W. Graber, extension forester at N. C. State College.

In wooded tracts, cattle waste their energy and reduce their body weight roving in endless searches for grass. And at the same time they prevent young saplings from growing up to renew the older trees that either die out or are cut off for wood or lumber.

Unrestricted grazing also damages timber already standing and is bad on the soil. Timber growth is slowed, the quality of the timber lowered. Tops die, roots and butts rot, and much timber that would otherwise be good has to be discarded when the trees are cut for market.

Cattle relish the foliage of white ash, sugar maple, yellow poplar, elm, basswood, white oak, red oak, shell bark hickory, and other of the more valuable timbers. The result is that the animals browse off the saplings before they can grow to any appreciable size. Other saplings that are not eaten are liable to be trampled down.

Generally, Graber said, the better quality woods are preferred by the cattle, while the poorer woods are left to grow, thereby lowering the quality of the timber in the stand.

Cattle also cut up the leaf litter, pack the soil, expose the roots, and start little gullies. The result is that little rain water is absorbed. It runs off quickly in rivulets which start erosion. With less water in the soil and the fertile elements washed away timber growth is stunted.

Next to fire, grazing is the most detrimental agent to woodlands, Graber declared.
