LOCAL INSTITUTION WILL BE HIGH TYPE

Faculty To Be Announced At Early Date—Opens Sessions This Fall

Brevard College, to open here in September of this year, will not be "just another college," but will be a piece of opportunity for the young people of Western North Carolina, and other sections, according to President Eugene J. Coltrane, who arrived here last week to assume active charge of the new institution.

"We expect to make Brevard a college of opportunity for the young people of Western North Carolina and adjacent states," said President Coltrane.

"Brevard will not be just another college, but will be a somewhat different kind of college. Certainly, regular college work will be offered so that students completing the courses will be readily admitted to advanced standing in the colleges and universities of the entire country.

"In a genuine sense, however, Brevard college will minister to the needs, intellectual and spiritual, of young people who do not care to study in other institutions.

"Particular care will be taken from the beginning," said President Coltrane, "to conduct a type of institution which can be accredited by the state department of education and the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. A faculty of scholarly men and women, well trained in the technique of teaching is the first essential in such a program. These men and women will be chosen not only for their training and experience but also for their interest and devotion to the principles upon which the college is being founded."

The president has already interviewed many prospective teachers and will be prepared soon to announce the complete faculty for the college for the coming year.

"It is quite likely that the public will be surprised at the splendid array of experienced and well-trained men and women who will be on this list," said Mr. Coltrane.

In order to make the institution of the greatest service to the young people of this region, the expenses are to be held to the lowest possible figure.

After a study of the situation, Mr. Coltrane has announced that a student will be able to spend the entire year at Brevard college for $200.
