

Next War Will Be Fought From Air, Says Well Known Authority

With war clouds hovering over Europe, an article taken from The Buffalo (N. Y.) Times will be of special interest to people here, and especially so since the very timely article is an interview with Dr. Groves H. Cartledge, head of the chemistry department of the University of Buffalo.

Dr. Cartledge is well known in Brevard, being a son-in-law of Mrs. G. C. Witmer. During the World war, Dr. Cartledge was liaison officer and saw service in the American Experiment station at Washington, and had charge of proving new inventions in methods of warfare. The story carried in the Buffalo paper follows:

What about the next war?
Gas from the air, says a University of Buffalo professor.

Infantry with rifle and bayonet, assisted by an air force, says a brigadier general of field artillery.

The struggle for the mastery of the air, says a captain of the United States air corps.

The end of Christian civilization, says a leading Buffalo educator.

The situation in Europe where France is afraid of a Germany that may re-arm; where Hitler is feverishly building a German nationalism; where Austria grimaces at its old friend and ally across the border; and where Mussolini reviews the heavily armed Fascists on every occasion, naturally focuses the mind of the world on war.

And those who would forget about it have their memories jarred by Japan's recent action in China and the growls of the big bold Russian bear as he prepares for border trouble with the Mikado's forces in Siberia.

The horrors of the last war naturally lead us to ask what might be the nature of a future conflict.

It is the general consensus of opinion that in a future war the non-combatants, the defenseless civilians, will be embroiled more directly, and more disastrously. Mechanized armies, with long distance arms, aircraft, submarines, poison gas and a probable innovation of the most barbarous conception—pestilence, will reach for the folks at home—the mothers, the wives, the babies.

It has long been a military truism that no army in the field is stronger than the country behind it. The morale then must be maintained on two fronts—field of battle and the source of supply at home. It will be the aim of the boards of strategy in the future to wear down as quickly as possible the army behind the army—the workers in field and factory. And when the powers of explosion and gas and disease are unleashed against the home fronts they will run wild. No hand will be able to control them, once they are freed. A life seeking, death dealing gas cannot discriminate. It has no intelligence. It cannot pass over the aged invalid in her bed and the sleeping child in its crib.

Dr. Groves H. Cartledge, head of the chemistry department of the University of Buffalo, describes the war of the future in four words, gas from the air.

"The next war will be a quicker war," Dr. Cartledge said "We are accustomed to quicker and more drastic action now. Things we wouldn't tolerate a decade or two ago we accept now."

"In the event of a future conflict, it is my opinion that the feeling of the people would be that the quicker the war is ended the better. The means of attaining the end would not be scrutinized too closely."

"Although manpower will never lose value, the old fashioned methods of warfare have been put aside. The weapons of today are gas and the airplane.

"I believe that a nation at first would use gas only to incapacitate. But if the tides of fortune should turn, the nation would become brutal and go to terrible lengths to win."

"The majority of nations have outlawed the use of gas, but I am skeptical that they will abide by their pacts and treaties if hard pressed. Two tons of liquid gas, carried by an airplane, would be sufficient to blow out the life of every man, woman and child and animal in a strip 100 feet wide and seven miles long. And this gas is mild compared to some of the new gases that each government now has on hand."

Dr. Cartledge spoke of the long range photography which now has been wonderfully developed. It is possible to take a picture at a distance of two to three hundred miles, through fog, snow or rain, and thus know just where to place the deadly poisons.

All nations have a gas, cacodyl isocyanide, so frightful that military men admit that they can't bear to use it.

"In the event of a future war, treaties to the contrary notwithstanding, losses from gas and very likely pestilence can be expected. And the soldier in the battle line will not be alone to face terrible danger. For a criminal nation gone mad can and will attack civilians as well.

"Under sufficient protection from the air, the development of infantry tactics, which at present makes an infantry regiment a combination of riflemen, bombers, machine gunners, and artillerymen, together with improvement in large calibre weapons, will make it possible to throw a tre-

NEW BLUE EAGLE TO BE GIVEN TO FIRMS

WASHINGTON, May 9.—NRA's new blue eagle will make its long delayed debut this week.

Arrangements to begin its distribution were announced here with a letter from Administrator Hugh S. Johnson which is being delivered by the Post Office Department to every business man in the country.

The new eagle, with the legend "We Do Our Part" replaced by the single word "Code" will identify employers who are operating under an approved code and "have united to complete the work of recovery," Johnson said.

Under the word "Code" will appear the name of the industry and an individual registration number.

For industries for which codes have not yet been completed Johnson issued an executive order permitting continued use of the old blue eagle.

Johnson's letter to business men explaining the new eagle said:

"Its display by you will inform the public that you are cooperating with the vast majority in stamping out unfair practices and methods of competition and that you are giving your employees a square deal by paying code wages and adhering to code hours."

Last year you were asked to display the blue eagle as evidence of your faith in the ability of American trade and industry to defeat depression by united effort.

"This year you are asked to display this distinctive blue eagle as a symbol that you, together with the other members of your particular trade or industry, have united to complete the work of recovery."

It takes approximately one mile of wire to make a full sized window screen.

"When a great mass of men and the mechanized implements of warfare are turned loose, I hesitate to predict what the loss in lives and property will be.

"But no matter what happens, the infantry must be there to hold the ground taken. The air force will assist both in taking and holding."

In 1928 England held a mock air attack on London. Seventy-five airplanes, each carrying 500 pounds of theoretical bombs, swooped down on the city. Seventy-five defense planes besides balloons, anti-aircraft guns and every known device for defense were hurled against the attackers. Within 30 minutes every specified target had been hit by the attackers and all enemy planes had escaped without a casualty. The attacking planes were manned by private pilots to give the defenders every advantage.
