SCHOOLS OF STATE ARE ON PROBATION

CHARLOTTE, Dec. 19.—The year 1935, three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the first secondary school in America, is likely to find only seven public high schools in North Carolina on the accredited list of the Southern Association of Secondary Schools.

Next year will be observed in the United States as the tercentenary of the founding of Boston Latin school in Massachusetts in 1635, and that of the 67 accredited high schools in this state, 60 of them fall short of the southern associations requirements and have been put on probation for one year only. Therefore the nationwide celebration is likely to find North Carolina high schools in worse condition than those of any other state in the south with fewer on the accredited list.

The main handicap to recognition of the Tar Heel schools as standard is the matter of length of term. The association requirement is 175 days, but only seven high schools in the state have a nine months' term—Southern Pines, Roanoke Rapids, Durham, North Wilkesboro, and a few others. The next requirement lacking in all but the seven schools is the $1,000 annual salary for teachers.

As a result of these conditions students from the standard eight months high schools in the state would not have to take an examination to enter colleges in this state, for the college requirements in North Carolina were set up to meet existing conditions. However if students want to attend colleges in other states, save a few in Virginia and South Carolina, they will have to take entrance examinations unless their school appears on the accredited list of the southern association.
