

HOSIERY MILL WORK PROGRESSING NICELY

Mechanics Tuning Up Machinery—Will Employ Local Operators Later

Machinery installation in the A. W. Wheeler & Son hosiery mill is being rushed, with extra mechanics being engaged in placing and tuning up the machinery.

Mr. Wheeler said the first of this week, that it would probably still be several weeks before the plant got started, and that only a few machines would be started at first, with others being started as they are placed and gotten into perfect running order.

Late type machinery is being installed in the well-equipped building, Mr. Wheeler explained, and this is taking considerable time, inasmuch as the kind of product which will be manufactured here will be of the first order.

Operators for the first machines will necessarily be experienced knitters, who are being brought in from other plants. These experienced operators will start teaching helpers immediately after the machines are started, and will continue in this manner as the additional machines are placed in running condition.

Several local men are now employed in the plant, assisting in getting the machinery placed and put into running order, and these will be first to get places as apprentice knitters, and in turn teaching others the trade. It is the plan of the Messrs. Wheeler to use all the local operatives possible, and to get started up in full at the earliest possible moment, but it will be sometime yet, Mr. Wheeler said before very many new people will be put on.

Watershed Hunters, Trespassers Will Receive Severe Punishment

Watershed possums, coons, rabbits, squirrels, or any kind of game has gone to the high price of $50.00 for each and everyone of such game taken, and worse still, it is worth exactly fifty dollars to try to get game of any sort on the watershed.

Fact is, it is a costly place to walk on, even—$50.00 for just setting foot on the Town of Brevard watershed, and Mayor A. H. Harris said Tuesday night that more stringent regulations than had ever been practiced before here in regard to trespassing on the watershed was necessarily having to be put into effect.

The lame excuse of "not knowing" where the watershed boundary lines are, will be scrutinized very closely hereafter, in any case that comes before His Honor for trial, and watchmen have been told to take more precautions in keeping people off the boundary from whence Brevard's ordinarily 100 per cent pure water supply comes, and to be diligent in performing their

STRANGE REPTILE FOUND NEAR BREVARD

A black iguana, captured near Brevard last Monday afternoon caused quite a stir, and no end of ohs and ahs, and kept most folk back a good distance by its vicious appearance.

The reptile was captured near Camp Carolina by M. W. Fortune, of North Brevard, who was out in that section training a young dog. Mr. Fortune saw the creature lying on top of some brush, and captured it by placing a forked stick over its neck and then tying a string to one of its legs. He did not know what it was, and like most everyone else who saw it, kept his distance.

Professor Jack Dendy, biologist at Brevard College, classified the stranger as a black iguana, and said that while it was more or less vicious when molested, that it was not poisonous. The reptile is herbivorous, and is said to be a finely flavored food.

Professor Dendy said it was a native of Mexico, and other tropical countries. It very probably escaped from some of the boys who attended one of the summer camps, in the opinion of Mr. Dendy, as it would not have migrated here.

The iguana was about two feet in length, with a long slender tail, and a head that resembled both a crocodile and rattlesnake.

The biology class at the college plans to keep the iguana for study.
