

HARDIN, McMAHAN HEARD IN TALKS AT NYA CLASSES

Point Out Privileges That Are Enjoyed By Youth Of Today

Mayor Carl Hardin and Attorney E. H. McMahan were heard Tuesday morning in short addresses before a group of young boys enrolled in the furniture and cabinet making division of the vocational training classes of the NYA here.

Mayor Hardin, who spoke first, pointed out to the group that education does not merely mean being a graduate of a college or university. He said that the term "educated" could be applied to hundreds and hundreds of people who had never seen a school house, and that there were no limits to the heights a person might ascend by taking advantage of the opportunities offered in a woodworking class.

Mayor Hardin declared that the process of education was not training. He said monkeys were trained, but that persons became educated by learning to do things which no foreman had to tell them to do. He told the boys enrolled in the class that if they would apply themselves earnestly at their work, they, too, would become educated.

Mr. McMahan, in his talk, emphasized to the young people that they were being given a course by the Federal government and that they should adept themselves to their work and put forth their best. He compared the present situation in which young boys grow up and live to that of their ancestors who founded this country and pointed out that our forefathers never had such an opportunity as we have at the present time. He said that hard work had been the major factor in the building of this great country of ours and that the youth of today should show their appreciation by doing hard work themselves.

Mr. McMahan told the group, in six concise statements, how best to prepare themselves for life. He warned them to be honest and truthful, to be considerate of others, to learn to appreciate values, to learn to be thankful for what they had, to learn to think clearly, and to be serious in their work. He urged them, above all, to be a man, a real man who knows how to live.

Supervisors of the local NYA woodwork and carpentry training center is W. L. Wood, and currently enrolled in the class are James Anders, of Lake Toxaway, David Conner, of Cherryfield, Lovic Galloway of Selica, Doyle Eubanks of Selica, Arthur Anders of Rosman, Henry Snipes, of Rosman, Bill Bentley of Selica, and Joe Gillespie, of Rosman.
