Harvest Pulpwood Selective Cuttings

Uncle Sam has asked all North Carolina farmers to join in a program which would step up the production of pulpwood to fifteen million tons in 1943. R. W. Graeber, extension forester at N. C. State College, says that those who take a part in this national program should practice selective cutting because it is desirable under most conditions and because this method of handling the woodland provides more frequent cutting and larger cash returns over a period of years than does clear cutting.

"It is important to know what types of trees to take out in cutting pulpwood," Graeber said. "It is also important to cut the timber stand properly. The key to a productive forest is to maintain a good growing stock. Always leave a good stand of trees."

All trees which are to be taken out should be carefully marked and especially so where the job of harvesting is to be turned over to others. If a grower is not familiar with timber marketing he should see his county agent or consult with the regional forester. Sometimes it is best to remove several timber products, such as saw-logs, poles and pulpwood, at one operation.

Ora Loftis Starts Service In WAACS

Daytona Beach, April 7—Life in the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps began for Auxiliary Ora M. Loftis, of 35 Park avenue, Brevard, N. C., when she arrived at the Second WAAC Training Center to begin her basic military training.

Her first three days were spent in "Tent City", a settlement of 80 canvas tops bordering the Halifax river. During this period she was given a physical examination, issued her uniform and equipment and interviewed and classified for her assignment to the army job that will release a soldier for combat duty.

Auxiliary Loftis was then transferred to the cantonment area, a 600-acre tract developed for the initial training of WAAC troops. Assigned to a training company which numbers 150 women, she
