BLACKLEG CATTLE DISEASE BECOMING MORE PREVALENT
The blackleg disease, which affects cattle, sheep and goats, is becoming more prevalent, says Dr. C. D. Grinnells, Experiment Station Veterinarian at N. C. State College.

He reports that cases have occurred frequently in the mountain counties of North Carolina and that the disease may be expected to be brought in from other states, due to the added traffic in livestock now taking place. The trouble is widespread in livestock areas, especially in the "range country" and in the Mississippi Valley.

According to Grinnells, the disease is caused by a spore-forming germ or bacteria. The spore lives

FARM QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

QUESTION: At what distance in the row should sweet potato plants be set?

ANSWER: H. R. Niswonger, Extension Horticulturist, says that the plants should be spaced 12 inches apart in rows about 3 to 3½ feet apart. He points out that this close spacing reduces the number of "Jumbo" potatoes and also losses from stem rot. In areas where the crop is to be harvested for the early market, the distance should be at least 18 inches with the rows about 3 feet apart.

QUESTION: How can I build an egg cooler at home?

ANSWER: Write the Agricultural Editor, N. C. State College, Raleigh, for a free copy of Extension Folder No. 43, entitled "The Egg Cooler." It gives a blue print and bill of materials for building the cooler. Thousands of dollars worth of eggs can be saved this summer if growers will be careful in handling them.

In 1942, despite the stress of war, younger Russian readers were provided with 173 new books and their total distribution was 36,851,000 copies.

A fine-fog method of dividing and spreading insecticides has been discovered and "bombs" containing the mixture are being sent to the fighting fronts to help protect men against mosquitoes, flies and other insects.

The disease attacks cattle from four months to two years of age, Grinnells says, and the first noticeable symptom is lameness. This is generally followed by a swelling, with a high temperature and marked depression, usually resulting in death within a few days.
