So There'll
Always Be
Thanksgiving

Great sections of Berlin and other Axis cities today lie in ruins where bombs have cascaded upon them from the skies. Further and greater devastation is in prospect.

In Greece and other lands famine has claimed its millions. In other lands occupied by the Axis or in active war zones there has been severe suffering.

When we consider these things, we realize the extent to which we have been blessed . . . how real is the justification for our Thanksgiving this year. True, we can't get all of the things to which we are accustomed; there have been business dislocations; families have been separated; some of our countrymen have paid the supreme price of their devotion; taxes are burdensome. Still, as a nation we have escaped dire hardship in a world racked with woe. It is fitting at this time that we acknowledge our blessings and pledge anew our efforts, each in this own way, to preserve them and to extend them to other less fortunate peoples the world over. L.
