many like the head of the department of social studies at Belmont Junior high school, Dr. E. Henry Powell, who gave me recently the best understanding of my intentions:

"Dear Mr. Paul Mallon: "I am addressing you thus familiarly because that is the way you seem to me. Few of my friends seem as close to me as you do. After all, when a fellow listens to you every morning for years through your column, it takes a real close friendship to approach its total effect.

"I have attended many colleges both here and abroad and have many degrees, earned and honorary, but no professor or combination of professors has approached the contribution you have made to my knowledge and understanding."

To that purpose the column again is dedicated next year, each day, I will try to dig out some hidden guiding factor, or some new intelligence of the day's developments to add to my knowledge, and pass it on to you to add to yours.
