FROM PAGE ONEprimary came at the end of O. Max Gardner's administration. The convention that year (1932) came between the first and second Primary. The battle was between J. C. B. Ehringhaus, who is now practicing law in Raleigh and R. T. Fountain, who now lives in comfortable semi-retirement in Rocky Mount. Although at that time the next Governor had not been nominated, Ehringhaus led Fountain by around 50,000 votes in the first primary and he and his followers were the bosses of the convention. Of course, back of them was Governor Gardner. But whereas the old conventions
