(From Front Page Second Sec.) sensation" and the "finest violinist of a generation" lived up to his reputation Saturday night when he displayed the difficult and stirring Concerto in D Major for Violin and Orchestra by Beethoven. Following the concerto, Mr. Spivakovsky was called back for numerous bows and the applause lasted more than five minutes.

Orchestral selections on Saturday's program included the overture to "The Bartered Bride," "Suite Provencale," by Darius Milhaud, and Concertino for Horn and Orchestra, featuring Merrill Wilson, French horn soloist. Mr. Wilson is a graduate student at the University of Michigan School of Music, and was a member of the festival symphony orchestra.

Hess, tenor of the Philadelphia Opera, was well received by a large and particularly responsive audience at the final concert Sunday afternoon. Mr. Hess was highly applauded and offered three encores in addition to his program. His encores included the love song by Lehar, "Yours is My Heart Alone," "Then You'll Remember Me," from the opera, "The Bohemian Girl," and the favorite, "Come To the Fair."

Included on his program were selections from Handel's "Judas Maccabaeus," and Haydn's "The Creation." He also sang the difficult "Lament of Federico," from Cilea's "L'Arlesiana," and the Flower Song from "Carmen."

During intermission Edmund D. Campbell, of the Brevard Music foundation spoke briefly thanking the audience for their loyal support to the Festival, the Foundation, and Transylvania Music camp. He emphasized that there were no monetary rewards from any of these undertakings, only the benefits reaped from hearing great music. John I. Anderson, editor of The Times, spoke to the radio audience over Station WBBO at intermission, expressing appreciation on behalf of the board of directors, for the marvelous support given this year's musical event.

The executive committee of the festival association wishes to thank the city, county police and state highway patrolmen for the excellent and courteous handling of traffic at the concerts both week ends.

and other insects. Flies breed on filth and bring that filth to us by way of food and drink. We know that the only way to eliminate flies is to eliminate their breeding places which are primarily found in cow stalls, horse stalls, and chicken lots which are not kept clean, and in decayed piles of organic matter," it was stated.

In order to eliminate such conditions everyone must do his share in cleaning up his own premises and keeping them in a clean and sanitary condition, Mr. Hart emphasized.

"It takes constant work to do this, but it is absolutely necessary. In addition to cleaning up our premises, home owners are being requested to immediately secure a standard metal garbage can with a tight fitting lid. These cans should not be over 30-gallon capacity in order that the sanitary department can readily empty them on the trucks. They should be kept clean and covered at all times. Proper trash and garbage disposal is a necessary part of any clean-

Cooperation is the keynote of success in any effort, he said. "It is earnestly requested that the people of this community make every effort to cooperate with the city and county officials and the boards of health to make this program a success. It is obvious that a single clean-up drive will not provide permanent improvement in the sanitary condition of our section. It is our desire to stimulate the people of this community to assist us in maintaining a permanent program of good sanitation in order to make this one of the cleanest and most healthy sections in North Carolina. The success of this program is in your hands," he commented.

"A clean city and county will create a desire in others to come here either to make their home or to visit. Without the cooperation of the people, the officials together with the boards of health will be unable to bring about the conditions which I am sure most of the people of Brevard and surrounding area desire," Mr. Hart concluded.

but also tactile beauty in the square walls."

On the weaving practiced by the women, it says: "Of all the arts and crafts in the United States, the weaving of Southern Highlanders is the closest to the native and original culture, the purest, the most satisfying to the eye and spirit."

On the versatility of the craftsmen, it comments: "The list of things that the mountain people produce is almost a catalogue of the useful skills of man. They make four-poster beds, and candles out of bayberries, exquisite sterling-silver jewelry and goose-feather fans. They fashion dolls and lamps, mats and pewterware, scarfs and trays, and countless delightful things out of carved wood."

Removing the dasher with a flourish was Father's reward for back-bending, arm-stretching, collar-wilting labor . . . back in the days of making ice cream by hand.

As the cream thickened and the crank got harder to turn, it really took a Man of Muscle to keep the dasher turning.

Today, the daughter who used to watch Father turn that hand freezer whips her homemade ice cream out of the refrigerator as a matter of course . . . just another family chore taken over by electricity.

Yet, members of the Duke Power system remember when only the most daring housewife would allow a mechanical refrigerator to enter her kitchen.

The spirit of investigation . . . of trial and re-trial . . . continues in our organization today, because . . .
